Campaign Urges Anglers to Retain Only Large Fish

Real sportsmen usually are careful with matches when in the forests, but Douglas County residents this year are to be furnished with book matches carrying double precaution warnings, Ross Newcomb, game department biologist, reports.

Working with the Roseburg Rod and Gun Club, Newcomb is sponsoring circulation of the slogan, "Kill Less—Catch More" with relation to angling. The slogan is designed to call attention to the fact that virtually all trout caught in the Umpqua River and its tributaries are of migratory species. If permitted to reach the ocean they will mature and return as large fish. Newcomb is working to educate anglers to retain only large fish, releasing the unharmed small trout so that they may furnish better sport at a later date. Through contributions made by individual Rod and Gun Club members, Newcomb has had signs printed and posted at all major fishing spots along the main river and on the North Umpqua, as a means of keeping the slogan constantly before anglers.

He is now working on a match cover which will carry the "Kill Less—Catch More" slogan, along with the "Keep Oregon Green" reminder, thus providing a double conservation message. The match covers are being ordered in case lots by Roseburg merchants who will have their firm names imprinted as a means of advertising.

Program Wins Favor

At a meeting of the Rod and Gun Club membership Tuesday evening, Newcomb reported marked success for the educational program and said that more orders already had been received for the matches than had been expected although only few merchants had been contacted.

Reporting on the Umpqua River study, which he directs, Newcomb reported that a few steelheads still were passing the counting station at Winchester, but that the count was approximately 1500 behind last year.

The count on Chinook salmon is gaining, but the season is very late. Despite a catch by sports anglers of 208 known salmon, it is anticipated that this season's escapement, because of the late season, will be far greater than last year, although the cycle as a whole is expected to be light, judging from records of five years ago.

Rod and Gun Club members approved a site for the indoor rifle range building to be erected by the Roseburg Rifle club on the Winchester grounds, agreed to sponsor a scholarship for a 4-H club member selected for proficiency in hatching and rearing pheasants, approved a prize contest arranged by Cecil Graves with an outboard motor, shot gun, target rifle and wrist watches as prizes, and granted permission to St. Joseph's Parish to use the club grounds for a parochial school picnic.

ment. Gene McElroy, tournament chairman, requests that as many as possible make the trip.

Roseburg has played one home match with Coos Bay and won it. Tournaments are arranged for Cottage Grove and Coquille.

In the men's Wednesday tournament, Maurice Hallmark won low gross and also close to the pin. Ernie Pearson won long drive, and low net was split by Fred Sears and 'Shorty' Riley.
