Real Horatio Alger Story Graces Life Of Public Printer

By JANE EADS
WASHINGTON—John J. Deviny, public printer of the United States, says what happened to him should be inspiring to every employee of the government. Now head of the world's largest publishing house—the Government Printing Office—with a salary of $10,000 a year, the affable Mr. Deviny leans back in his comfortable leather-cushioned chair behind a big shiny desk in a big room and says:
"It's a real Horatio Alger story—mine. I'm the first career man and the first civil service employee ever to be appointed public printer.

"I began as a Bureau of Engraving apprentice in 1904, earning $300 a year. I didn't know a soul on the premises. From this bottomless pit of oblivion, I rose to the next to top job as assistant director in 1924."
Mr. Deviny, born within three blocks of the Capitol, the son of a grocer, and educated in a high school which he can point to out of his office window, says no politics entered into his rise. As a Washingtonian he can't vote.
For the man who moved into the chief's office only last March, after the resignation of Augustus E. Glegengack, the post means fulfillment of a life-long ambition.

"Back in my apprentice days," he says, "I would have traded my chance of becoming public printer for 10 cents."
Mr. Deviny, now 65, recalls that as a boy, he played on summer evenings around the open windows of the building in which his office now is located.
From the local high school, he went on to Josephinum College at Columbus, Ohio. Later he attended the Washington College of Law and was president of its graduating class. He became a member of the bar of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals.
After serving with the government until 1925, he left to take jobs with the commercial printing industry and printing trade associations for a dozen years. He returned to federal service in 1936 as assistant director of the Bureau of Old Age Insurance, serving also as a member of the Appeals Council for the Social Security Board. He became Deputy Public Printer in 1941. The Government Printing Office does a $53,000,000-a-year business, occupies some 35 acres of floor space, and hires some 7,000 employees. The office's documents division has an average of 30 million copies of more than 70,000 titles of publications on hand. Sales in 1947 totaled $3,038,377.

All government printing and binding is either produced or procured by the Government Printing Office. This includes all congressional and departmental publications, as well as 42,000 copies daily of the Congressional Record, the production of which is comparable to the assembling of a modern metropolitan daily.

Of every five dollars spent by the average American consumer, one dollar goes for food.

Only five percent of the population of the United States lived in urban communities in 1790.

Tests Show Frost Injury to Roads

ST. PAUL, Minn. — (AP) — A Minnesota highway engineer has developed a method of determining how much "backbone" is taken out of roads by spring thaws. Highway engineers in the nation's "frost belt" have long known highways are most vulnerable just after frost leaves the ground. But how much roads are weakened and what load weight restrictions should be imposed have in the past been arrived at by sometimes costly trial and error.

C. L. Motl, chief engineer for the Minnesota Highway Department, has set up a "bearing test." A metal plate 12 inches in diameter is placed on the highway. The plate serves as a base for a hydraulic jack which is made to lift the rear of a truck loaded with concrete blocks. A meter registers the amount the road surface is depressed.

By making bearing tests in the summer, when roads are dry and least likely to be damaged by heavy vehicles, and again after spring thawing, the per cent the road has been weakened is determined and restrictions are imposed accordingly. Motl says road surfaces are sometimes 60 per cent less capable of carrying loads after thawing.
