Columbia Basin Fund Reduction Affects Program

SPOKANE, May 28.—(AP)—C. Girard Davidson, assistant secretary of the interior, said today a "hold-back provision" writen into the 1949 appropriations bill will reduce Columbia basin expenditures by an additional $3,500,000 to $4,000,000.

The bill, approved yesterday by the House and forwarded to the Senate, provides $45,312,000 for Grand Coulee Dam and the Columbia Basin in the fiscal year starting July first. The figure is approximately $5,000,000 less than the amount requested by President Truman.

"The reduction from the President's request is more than the obvious $5,000,000," Davidson said. "There is another reduction of from $3,500,000 to $4,500,000, a concealed cut, resulting from a holdback provision written into the bill."

Davidson said the measure requires the reclamation bureau to hold back an amount equal to about 15 per cent of the work to be done under contract in the succeeding fiscal year.

Davidson said framers of the appropriation bill held that continuing contracts, a practice of the reclamation bureau for many years, violate the anti-deficiency law unless funds are held back for continuing work in part of the succeeding year.

He said that in light of the bill, Columbia Basin construction plans must be reevaluated.

Lane Memorial Plans Completed

Plans are being completed today for Memorial Day services commemorating General Joseph Lane, Oregon's first teritorial governor. The program, sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce, will consist of a radio program over KRNR Sunday from 10 to 10:15 a. m. and the graveside services in the Masonic cemetery about 11:30.

The commemoration, reported to be the first official observance of the famed Oregonian, is in keeping with the 1948 Oregon centennial program of the Oregon Trails Asoociation, Incroporated.

The graveside services will consist of the placing of a wreath upon the grave, the reading of a brief biography of General Lane and the firing of a gun salute.

The radio program will consist partly of the reading of a biographical sketch of the soldier-statesman, and partly of questions and answers. Mrs. Douglas Waite, granddaughter of General Lane will appear on the program, and also go to the cemetery.

Murderer Draws Rap of 199 Years

ROCKFORD, Ill., May 29.—(AP)—Glenn Marsh, 27-year-old farmer who attempted to steal his neighbor's wife after slaying her husband and father, today faced a prison sentence of 199 years.

A Circuit Court jury convicted Marsh of murdering Grant Muhrlein, 52, of Northport, Mich., father of Mrs. Katherine (Kit) Anderson, 27, Marsh's paramour in his illicit romance. The jury recommended the 199-year sentence, which becomes mandatory.

Both men were slain last Nov. 7 when Marsh invaded the home of Anderson's parents and abducted Mrs. Anderson after she had reneged on a promise to divorce her husband and marry him. She said she changed her mind after learning she might lose custody of her three young children.

$50,000 Brooch Finder Thought It Was 'Junk'

HOLLYWOOD, May 29.—(AP)—The nightclub waiter who found Joan Crawford's diamond brooch didn't think it looked like 50,000 bucks worth.

In fact, he told police he thought it was "junk."

Miss Crawford missed the costly bauble when she left a night club Wednesday night.

When detectives questioned employes at the night club and searched the place last night, Waiter Paul Bodlogar asked what they were after. They described the $50,000 brooch.

"Oh that!" said he. "I thought it was junk."

He gave the brooch to the detectives. They returned it to Miss Crawford.

THE COST OF WAR

Observance of Memorial Day should have special significance this year. As we honor our dead, and particularly those who sacrificed their lives to preserve the nation, it is well that we take inventory of the cost of war—not a cost measured in money but, rather, the expenditure in lives of our finest and best young men. If we rightly appraise the cost of war, we will redouble our efforts for peace, but only with the determination that the cause for which our honored dead sacrificed their lives shall not be lost to the world but shall advance even though more sacrifice of "blood, sweat and tears" may be required.

No major advance in civilization has been made without its blood sacrifice. Christianity was baptized in the blood of martyrs who died in Roman arenas. It grew and flourished under persecution in the Dark Ages. Its evangelical activities were stimulated by divergent schools of thought among its leaders. Today Christianity is the fundamental civilizing force at work in a combative world. But it is a power only because of the blood sacrifice of its martyrs.

Millions of lives have paid the ransom for liberty. The new and unique political theory that men are "endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights," as voiced in the American Declaration of Independence, initiated a struggle for personal freedom that still continues. The release of peoples from political slavery has been a long hard sruggle, which still is far from its conclusion. While men and nations have been striving to free themselves from imperialism and oppresive government, enemies of freedom have organized their totalitarian theories and have endeavored by force to place the yoke of dictatorship upon the world's population. But freedom has consistently been victorious, even though the cost has been high. Today we find more and more nations being released from imperialistic and colonial status and elevated into the ranks of democratic peoples. The hallowcd birthplace of Christianity echoes today to gunfire as a new state fights for its life.

But while some nations have made progress toward freedom and democracy, others have been brought by force under totalitarian dictation and slavery. The battle men have been waging throughout centuries on the upward climb of civilization still is in progress. The shadow of a third World War—a war more destructive, more terrifying than any that has gone before—spreads upon the surface of our globe and darkens our days.

We cannot turn deaf ears to the pleadings of enslaved peoples of the world striving to free themselves from the yoke of oppression. Upon the United States has been placed the robe of the champion of freedom. The world looks to us today for leadership.

Ours are the ways of peace. We seek no quarrel. We covet no land. We desire only harmony and peace. We mourn our dead and pray that war shall not again engulf us. But peace has its enemies. Christianity and liberty are opposed by forces of evil. Fear of power is the only fear these enemies know. They have no conscience and no sympathy. They can be controlled only by police authority.

So as we appraise the cost of war, we also must balance that cost against the value of liberty and its preservation. We must, as we count our sacrifice in years past, face determination that those who died shall not have died in vain. Keeping in mind the tremendous price we have paid for the advance to date of Christianity and freedom, we should redouble our efforts to achieve the spread of our political theory of personal liberty through every effort other than war. We should strive to set up a police authority sufficient to restrain aggression, but we should never lose sight of the goal, the ultimate elimination of totalitarian enslavement.

Dr. Albert E. Wiggam, the famous psychologist, says that happiness comes and goes as regularly as the U. S. mail. According to the good doctor, we all have a definite cycle, in which a number of days are low, a number high . . . and the others a toss-up. Your cycle is as unchanging as a hotel detective's expression . . . and once you know it you can tell how you'll feel on any given day. We all have days when "it ain't worth getting up," as Durante says . . . and now we can anticipate those days. And I guess the only thing to do about it is grin and bear it until the high tide of happiness returns.

Sam Reed came up with a good idea at the Toastmaster's Club meeting the other night, when he asked for volunteers to help work on the new swimming pool.

At the same meeting Don Wilson, Bob Harvie and Carl Permin spoke a full minute on their favorite hobby—rest. If Sam succeeds in getting these boys out, he's accomplished something.

I just read about a couple of young fellows getting 30 days in jail for whistling at girls. I'll bet that really made them whistle. DIAMONDS ARE COLOR BLIND!

Yes, diamonds are color blind. How can seventy five per cent of all diamonds sold in retail stores be "blue-white and perfect" while only one per cent of all the diamonds mined are actually blue white and perfect?

Is it possible that in crossing the ocean these diamonds magically change color? How do these various colored diamonds suddenly become perfect and "blue-white"?

HUNDRED TO ONE

There is only one answer to this contradicting situation: Many of the diamonds being sold as "blue-white" and perfect are not, but are of inferior grades. The fact is, of one hundred carats of gem diamonds being mined, only one carat can be classified as blue white and perfect. Originally the term, blue-white was used to describe only the finest grade of diamonds. This is hot true to day.

RED, WHITE or BLUE

The term "blue-white" has been so misused by jewelers that almost any diamond might be called blue-white, even though it varies in color from fine white to light yellow or even light brown. What then of the customer who is comparing values? He is offered the choice, let us say, between a ½ carat blue-white diamond (which is slightly yellow) for $500 at one store and a ½ carat "blue white" diamond which is really fine white for the same price at another store. Since the customer probably could not tell which diamond is the better even if he could view them side by side he cannot be certain which is the better value.

TEN STONES—TEN COLORS

Because of the misuse of the term blue-white as used to describe the color of a diamond, the American Gem Society has long ago banned the use of the term by its members. A system of color classification has been adopted which has standardized diamond grading beyond a doubt. Under this system the diamonds are classed into 10 grades varying from fine white down to slightly yellow. The class into which a diamond falls is determined by comparison with ten master stones which are standardized for color, one stone for each color grade. Thus a stone sold by a jeweler member of the Society in Berne, Switzerland, London, England, New York City or Roseburg will be uniform for quality and value.

Color may determine the value of your diamond by one third. The actual value of a yellow or imperfect diamond rises and falls because the demand for them is less; while the value of the fine white stone is steady as a result of continuous demand.

Every owner of a fine diamond owns a part of the world's most precious and rare commodities. That is because all of the gem diamonds in the world would not fill a box four feet square.
