

Main Recruiting Units Ready Draft Procedure

SAN FRANCISCO, July 21 (AP)—Twenty-three Army and Air Force Recruiting Main Stations throughout the Sixth Army area are getting set for pre-induction processing of the first group of selectees referred to them by local draft boards under the new Selective Service act, General Mark W. Clark, Sixth Army commander, announced today.

Recruiting Main Stations authorized to process all selectees and volunteers are located in the Oregon District at Eugene, Portland, and Boise, Ida.

Registration of all 18 to 25-year-old men is contemplated to begin at their local draft boards about the third week in August, although only the 19 to 25 age group are eligible for selection. Screening for those eligible to be called up first will follow immediately. Final decision as to the initial age group to be called up has not yet been announced.

PROCEDURE TOLD

Potential selectees will be referred to the Recruiting Main Station nearest their homes for pre-induction examination to determine physical, mental and moral fitness for military service. It is contemplated that the first examinations in the Sixth Army area will take place on or about September 22.

Following the pre-induction examination, the registrants will return to their homes to await report on their status through the local draft boards. In most cases this will take approximately three weeks.

Men selected for induction will be informed of the date to return to the Recruiting Main Station for induction and assignment to one of the branches of the Armed Forces.

Present plans call for the majority of the draftees to be assigned to the Army, with a small proportion going to the other services.

Processing of selectees will be an added function for the Recruiting Main Stations, and recruitment of volunteers will continue as the primary mission as it has in the past.

21-Month Period Of Enlistment In Army Permitted

A new enlistment period of 21 months has been authorized by the Army for young men 19 to 25 years inclusive, T/Sgt. Woodrow W. Halstead, station commander of the Roseburg Army and Air Force Recruiting Station, announced today.

Previously, the Army would not allow enlistment for less than three years, with longer enlistment terms of four, five and six years.

Men who enlist for the 21-month term will be transferred to the Enlisted Reserve Corps on discharge from the service. The reserve obligation may be cancelled, however, by extending their enlistments one year.

Sergeant Halstead said recruiting officials look for announcement of the new, shorter enlistment term to cause a spurt in recruiting among draft-age men, since it enables them to complete their military service in less than two years.

Expansion of the Army and Air Force will open the ranks of thousands of non-commissioned officer grades, the sergeant said, and men who volunteer now will have completed their training and be qualified as leaders by the time Selective Service gets into full operation.

Announcement of the new 21-month enlistment term does not effect enlistment for longer terms and advantages that go with the latter, including choice of branch of service, selection of technical training schools, and assignment to specific units and overseas theaters.

With the stock market moving up faster than a college freshman's blush, financial experts are sounding a warning note about new promotions. They tell us that when stocks are rising more people get interested in buying them . . . and promoters see a chance to fatten their "take home pay" by promoting new mines, wells or firms that have about as much chance of surviving as ice-cold watermelon at a picnic. They're out to trim the lambs and leave them with a sheepish look. So the advice is to put your extra money into old reliable stocks . . . that is if you have any extra money left!
