Salvation Army's Service Extolled By J. M. Chesebro

"My respect for the Salvation Army is one I have learned, for its members go into a project with their hearts and not with their heads," stated John M. Chesebro, public relations director for the Salvation Army, who is directing the current fund raising campaign for the Roseburg unit's new $35,000 building program.

Chesebro, speaking at the Junior Chamber of Commerce meeting Monday night in the Umpqua Hotel, stated he was not a member of the Army, but that he had the highest respect for its membership and work.

Tracing the history of the Salvation Army, he said it came into existence in 1865 in darkest England, because its leaders, William and Catherine Booth, wanted to do something about cleaning up the moral situation in that country. Today, he said, the Army operates in 95 countries.

Its existence today, said Chesebro, might be attributed to the fact the spirit of the Army is "come along brother and have a cup of coffee."

He quoted Lady Astor as saying "the war scare in Europe would be stopped, if we outfitted the Salvation Army with Bibles and told them to go to work."

Bums Tended Oft

Characterizing the work of the Army in Roseburg with that all over the world, he described how the local director and his wife worked on a 24-hour day basis gathering clothes, and, with the assistance of the Women's Home League, sews and repairs clothing that may either be given to transients, or sold and the money used to feed those in need.

Were it not for the Salvation Army, he declared, there would be "bums" knocking at every door in Roseburg. Strangely, however, he added, when a load of wood was dumped outside the Army office recently, not a single transient showed up until the wood was removed three days later.

No Proselyting

Chesebro stated it was not the purpose of the Salvation Army to proselyte persons of other religious faiths, but rather to bring religion to those persons "living across the track" who have never had a church of their own. Members of the Army are religious, he stated, but they believe in teaching by precept and example.

That, he said, is back of the program in Roseburg, to construct office buildings and a gymnasium, which will serve as a youth center. Capt. Claud Bowden, local director, hopes to organize a basketball league and to inaugurate other sports.

But support of the townspeople in such an enterprise is necessary, said Chesebro, who solicited the Junior Chamber's cooperation in a sports program.

He said that already a large amount of material has been donated for the proposed facilities. The local sponsoring committee, headed by civic leaders, have beyond the fondest hopes of the Salvation Army decided to go all out for a building program at this time, rather than to string the construction along.

Objects in Sky Back 'Mars' Idea

PORTLAND, Ore., July 27.—(AP)—The Man-from-Mars theory had another supporter here today.

Moulton B. Taylor, Longview, Wash., engineer in charge of the Navy's guided missile development program in the war, joined those who believe the strange objects speeding through American skies are from another planet.

"It could be men from Mars," he insisted to a reporter.

"Why not? We know how to build such an escape missile—one that could escape the bounds of gravity and soar into free space among the planets . . . if we can build such craft, what is to prevent others from doing so, assuming that a similar order of intelligence exists on other planets?" he continued.

"You and I may see the day when we will be united with Russia defending this planet against attack from space," Taylor said.

The veteran aeronautical engineer now is head of a firm setting up a factory at Longview to produce the Aerocar, an automobile with wings.

Better Salary, Cheaper Living Costs Lure American Teacher to Japan

By JANE EADS

WASHINGTON—(AP)—It will be quite a change, but Gladys Duffield, a tall good-natured woman in her thirties who has taught school in this country for 10 years, wants just that.

She's giving up her pleasant apartment here, selling her furniture and packing herself off to Nagoya, Japan. She'll be teaching the ABC's as prescribed by American elementary school methods, and her little pupils will be Americans, but there'll be a difference.

For one thing, she'll get a better salary. Here she got a salary of $3,000 a year. She had to live on that. In Nagoya, at the American school for children of the occupying military and civilian personnel, she gets $4,400. She has to deduct only $45 a month for living costs. That takes care of the food. Billeted in a dormitory set up for women workers by the Army, she will have no rent to pay.

Leaving from Seattle, she will have a leisurely 12 to 13-day sailing on an Army transport, where modern civilian comforts have been provided and the food is good. She saw one of the menus. "It looked like a menu from the Ritz Carlton, with at least seven choices and all the trimmings including celery and olives," she told me enthusiastically.

The clothing and other things she takes with her must not weigh more than 400 pounds. As she has signed up for a year, she is taking clothing for two seasons—old clothes and new. She got her instructions along with other teachers, clerk-typists, stenographers and others from the Overseas Affairs Branch, Civilian Personnel Division, Office of the Secretary of the Army. She was instructed to take along a good three months' supply of soap, cosmetics, tooth paste and such, and a two years' supply of nylons.

Until this year the major portion of American teachers serving in occupied areas in the Far East, Austria and Germany, were dependents—wives of officers and so on. Now these are employed only as substitutes, and teaching requirements are more or less what they are here. Applicants must have an AB or a BS degree, a minimum of 18 hours in an education course including, if desired, practice teaching; a valid state teaching certificate and a minimum of two years' teaching experience.

Some 300 or more qualified teachers for American elementary schools and high schools overseas have been sent over under the new set-up. At present all jobs are filled, but letters about jobs are still being received—at 1,000 a week. Applications are filed away in the event there is need for a replacement, or where schools are likely to be expanded.

TWO ANGLERS FINED

Elizabeth F. Covert, arrested for fishing without an angler's license, and Russell F. Gunter, arrested for angling with improper license, were each fined $25 by Justice of Peace Thomas C. Hartfiel when they appeare in his court Monday.
