

Nylons Produced From Wheat Seen As Possibility

PENDLETON, Ore., Nov. 18. (AP)—Nylons from wheat? "Sure, that's possible. Wheat could be used as a raw material in plastics and other spectacular products, too," Wheat Commission Administrator Ed Bell said, "but none of these manufacturing processes now is an acceptable outlet for surplus northwest wheat."

Research projects now are under way to develop new industrial uses, but that is a long-range program, the administrator told a Umatilla county farm bureau meeting. Chemists, processors and other authorities are being called together early in December to explore possibilities.

Industrial processes now known he said, could not use enough wheat or could not pay the price for wheat that is obtainable elsewhere.

"The most important thing to the grower," Bell declared, "is to find markets where the most wheat will be purchased at the most favorable price to him. In order to dispose of surplus northwest wheat we must think in terms of finding markets that will take 10, 15 or even 20 million bushel chunks."

Livestock feeding, another field in which wheat may be used locally, is being promoted by showing producers of meat, milk and eggs how to use wheat for feed. The commission, particularly in fat livestock, shows to promote wheat feeding.

Industrial uses for wheat are not at the moment practical for the northwest, he concluded. Processing companies are located in the midwest where they can purchase competing products, such as corn and grain sorghums, both cheaper than wheat. To combat this a disadvantage, the wheat commission is striving through modern research, to find new uses for wheat, new outlets for present wheat and to expand the current market.

A movement of young members, outside of Congress, is required to revitalize the party, Morse declared.

He said the movement should be aimed at "protecting the politically and economically weak from the strong," but that it should be achieved "within the framework of private property economy in accordance with legislative principles and guarantees of the Constitution including the Bill of Rights."

Progress Reviewed

Helliwell outlined briefly steps toward the initial organization of the Roseburg club, and discussed progress through the years. He related that the club had many ups and downs, but in the last few years has grown to be a very strong group, and has contributed a great deal to the welfare of the community through its civic projects.

Singleton and Harth also spoke briefly and expressed their pride in being members during the last 20 years.

Mrs. Phil Harth, as president of the Ladies, spoke briefly and Mayor Albert G. Flegel was also called on for a few words. Dr. L. M. Lehrbach, president, conducted the meeting.

Announcement was made that next Thursday night's scheduled meeting will not be held because of Thanksgiving Day, and that a turkey dinner will be served at the meeting in two weeks.

A vote of thanks was extended to Losee for his part in conducting the program of the evening.

Guests included Mrs. Helliwell, Mrs. Harth, Mrs. Pickens and Hazel Scott; A. L. Stanley and Ralph Knight, both of Sutherlin; H. T. ### CIO Will Not Organize Own Political Party

some developments:

1—A three-man committee was reported ready to recommend to the CIO executive board tomorrow that the left-wing New York City CIO Council be deprived of its charter and completely rebuilt with different leaders. The board will debate the recommendation and take action.

2—The resolutions committee approved a batch of resolutions to be sent to the convention floor next week. The resolutions were kept secret. But committee members told reporters several of them are bitter pills for the pro-Communist faction. One of the declarations, for example, is reported to endorse the Marshall Plan and other phases of American foreign policy.

3—Anti-Communist leaders are seeking a practical method of forcing all CIO vice presidents and members of the executive board to conform to official CIO policies.

On Wednesday Murray told the executive board in firecracker language that CIO officers must follow CIO policies. But he was not specific as to how to enforce this, and there have been widely varying interpretations of his meaning.
