

Truman Mimics Kaltenborn In Forecast Fizzle

By ERNEST B. VACCARO
 WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—(AP)—President Truman picked up the title of "mimic" Wednesday night in a sarcastic imitation of a radio commentator who he said told listening millions he could not win last November 2.

He appeared at a dinner to tell the presidential electors that he is opposed to abolition of the electoral college. He pitched into H. V. Kaltenborn, the radio commentator, with an imitation of Kaltenborn's style and voice that rocked the electors with laughter.

It seems that when he hid away at Excelsior Springs, Mo., election night he tuned in on Kaltenborn at midnight. He went on with the story in what he said was the commentator's own words.

"While the president is a million votes ahead in the popular vote—when the country vote comes in, Mr. Truman will be defeated by an overwhelming majority."

The president said Commentator Richard Harkness came on to analyze the situation "and to the sorrow of myself, and those who were listening with me, it looked very much as if the election would be thrown into the House of Representatives." and I said, 'we'd better go back to Kansas City, it looks as if I'm elected.' Kaltenborn told a reporter he was "flattered" by the president's imitating his delivery.

"It has been imitated by many competent comedians but I never felt they were able to approach the original very closely," he said. He added that he regretted not being there to hear for himself. Harkness said he had no comment.
