Beetles Freed To Feast On Costly Weed In Oregon

PENDLETON, May 12 — (AP) — Ten thousand beetles were nipping away at hypericum perforatum L. today.

Their little red anterior wings fanned them happily through the Blue Mountain foothills.

To them it is the land of milk and honey.

That is, Forest Service employees hope they find it so.

For the beetles are Australian-bred affairs—chrysolina hyperici—and hypericum perforatum is the Sunday dinner name for those weeds called St. Johnswort. The beetles like St. Johnswort, a weed that has resisted all chemical attacks.

When cattle eat St. Johnswort they become ill—and they find it spread over the grazing lands of Umatilla, Wallawa, Benton and Douglas Counties of Oregon as well as in Idaho and such sections of Washington as the Chatterley vicinity north of Spokane.

As a feed for cattle is results in shattered nervous systems.

The Australian beetles, though thrive on it. They like it so well there is considerable hope they can bring the noxious weed under control.

The beetles arrived here in two two-ounce ice cream cartons in an air shipment from the Bureau of Entomology laboratory at Berkeley, Calif. They were released in some once-fine grazing land in the Blue Mountain foothills — land where there is so much St. Johnswort that cattle turned loose there would become loco from the diet.

St. Johnswort is sometimes called Klamath weed, but County Agent Victor W. Johnson said that "isn't fair." There is no St.

NDND DIAL-LOG

Having personal news contacts throughout the world is one of the outstanding coverage patterns on Bill Henry's five-minute weekly broadcast (6:55 to 7 p. m.).

For example, the International Olympics Committee recently voted to hold the 1956 Summer Olympics in Melbourne, Australia, a fact which set off a hue and cry about changed climatic conditions and their effects on the athletes. Bill picked up his phone at the MBS office in Washington and put in a call for Rome. There he spoke to his friend Frank Beaurepaire, a former lord mayor of Melbourne, who gave him the headline story that the Summer Olympics in Australia would be held in September or October "to offset changes in climatic conditions for the athletes."

At 4:30 tomorrow, John Nesbitt will tell the story of John Wilkes Booth, the Lincoln assassin, and will ponder the question of whether or not the body claimed as his was really he (4:30 to 4:45 p. m.).
