Parent-Teacher Cooperation In Aiding 'Bewildered' Youth Urged

ST. LOUIS, May 18.—(AP)—Cooperation of parents and teachers in meeting family bewilderment caused by rapid social, economic and environmental changes was urged Tuesday by Mrs. Sidonie Matsner Gruenberg of New York, director of the Child Study Association of America.

Speaking on "Perennial Concerns of Parents," Mrs. Gruenberg told the National Congress of Parents and Teachers that parents must make fuller use of schools to develop new skills for dealing with their children and teachers must supplement rather than substitute for the family.

The speaker said rapidly and a great variety of bewildered parents and posed a problem which must be met jointly. She added: "Two children in the same family who are much as five years apart in age seem to be living in two different worlds. Migration of families was accelerated during the war. We seem suddenly to have discovered that strange people from strange regions are in our own villages and our own streets."

"Many parents are worried because they fear what their children may pick up from those other children—bad words, bad manners, bad ideas, nobody knows what..."

"Parents have to know the world into which their children are growing. They have to develop new skills for dealing with their children, not only physically and hygienically, but morally, mentally and socially."

Eric A. Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, told the convention that "it is foolish to make the movies, the radio, the newspapers, comic books and automobiles the scapegoats for failure in family life."
