Aviation gasoline for automobiles

Preventive Of Botulism

To Oregon Fowl Sought

1. Two months after the end of World War II. most oil companies were back on the market with first-quality "regular" and "premium" gasolines. To a motoring public which had been sputtering along for three years on strictly rationed, low-octane gasoline, the event was something of a field day. Everyone drove everywhere and gasoline sold like hotcakes.

2. Under the circumstances you'd hardly expect an oil company to pick that time to come out with a still better product. But, less than one month after Union Oil had put its "regular' gasoline (76) and its "premium" (76-Plus) back on the market, the company announced a brand-new product - 7600. 7600 was actually an aviation gasoline slightly altered to meet automobile operating conditions.

3. Its performance was so superior to anything the average motorist had ever experienced that people practically stood in line for it. In fact it was months before we got our production up enough to keep our stations from running dry. Today, almost four years later, 7600 is still the top-quality gasoline in the West. And people are still buying all we can make.

4. However, the important point of the story -to our way of thinking - is this: we made 7600 available on our own initiative. The customers didn't demand it. Conditions didn't make it necessary. But we knew, even though the public was more than satisfied with our present gasolines, that a still better one would win us more customers. And we were in competition,

5. If the oil business had been a monopolyprivate or governmental-this wouldn't have peen the case. For there's no incentive to go after more customers when you already have them all. But, because we didn't have all the customers, we had a very good reason for introducing an improved product.

6. All of which goes to prove, we think, that the only way you can guarantee maximum progress in an industry is to have an economic system that quarantees maximum incentives. Our American system, with its free competition, provides these to a degree no other system has ever approached.
