Local Governments Would Lose Revenue Under Present CVA Bill, Officials Warned

PENDLETON, June 10.—(P)—Judges and commissioners from six Eastern Oregon Counties were told here that the present Columbia Valley Authority bill fails to provide for the revenues of local governments.

Forrest E. Cooper, Lakeview, counsel for the Public Lands Committee of the Association of Oregon Counties, said the present bill permits the CVA administrators to buy up private power companies which are heavy county tax revenue producers. The present bill, he explained, calls for the "benefit offset theory" of taxation which he described this way:

"The government would not pay any tax on federally produced power. It would pay a tax on private property taken off county tax rolls due to government purchase."

The amount the government would pay on this property would be based on an average of the taxes paid during the previous two years. But from the amount the government would pay counties would be deducted an amount CVA administrators deem the county has benefited from having CVA operate within its borders.

"The difficulty," Cooper declared, "is that there are many intangible and other related benefits. The CVA would be the final judge of the tax."

Cooper indicated that this is a weak part of the bill which should be corrected, if the CVA plan is adopted, in order to assure county revenues.

Unlike TVA Policy

He said that in the area where the Tennessee Valley Authority operates counties receive funds from the state government. In Oregon, however, he said that few counties receive grants from the state and that Oregon ranks 48th among the states giving money to counties.

"It is hard to discuss the CVA without having someone put the finger on me," Cooper said. "It is hard to keep from being tagged. I am giving you my professional opinion. My personal opinion doesn't matter."

He added that "if the people of Oregon are considering the
