restigation methods.

The Court ruled unanimously that the Committee did not violate constitutional rights when in 1946 it demanded "all the books, records, documents and correspondence" of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties.

The decision upheld the contempt conviction of George Marshall, chairman of the federation, who refused to deliver the records. Marshall was convicted in U. S. District Court here in April, 1948, and sentenced to pay a $500 fine and serve three months in jail.

In appealing the case, Marshall contended that (1) the House acted unconstitutionally when it created unconstitutionary when re-created the Un-American Activi-ties Committee, and (2) the Committee violated his consti-tutional rights when it sub-poensed the records.

A week ago, the Circut Court ruled the Committee has a right to ask witnesses whether they are or have been members of the Communist Party. That decision upheld contempt convictions of screen writers John Howard Lawson and Dalton Trumbo.

The Rodeo featured some of the toughest stock ever seen in local shows. Christensen Bros. brought steers here that proved to be a metch for the contestants, hard bucking horses, and huge bulls on which only a few riders were able to ride the required eight seconds.

The Bodge also was a regent.

The Rodeo also was a pageant of gaily dressed horsemen. Many riding clubs took part in the grand entry during the three days of the show. The procession was led by Queen Nadene Sparks and her court of princesses.
