Associated Press Foreign Affairs Analyst

The month-old Big Four foreign ministers' council meeting in Paris finally has ground to a weary close, having recorded some achievement although it has done little to make the halls of the pink palace echo with satisfaction.

Small wonder that an American spokesman wasn't optimistic in evaluating the results. One of the conference's chief accomplishments, as I see it, has been to emphasize again the conflict between the two blocs—Western Democracy and totalitarian Bolshevism. ed Germany will continue to be administered by the opposing blocs. An American spokesman said of this that "it didn't solve anything. It merely stated guiding principles."

Under this agreement the Big Four would reopen and encourage trade between East and West Germany. The Russians promise not to impose blockade conditions on Berlin again.

At face value that looks good, but its real value depends on whether it can be made to work. The establishment of political Austria when the treaty is signed. Another is that if the Soviet does drop its support of Yugoslav claims this may drive Marshal Tito—who is feuding with Moscow—into the Western sphere of influence.

they were on January 1, 1938, which means that Yugoslavia's claim has been thrown out. Russia is expected to withdraw her support to that claim. Yugoslavia won't get reparations but may "seize, retain or liquidate Austrian property" in Yugoslav territory. Austria will pay Russia $150,000,000 in reparations.

That's what has been agreed to in principle. It remains to be seen whether it will be what ultimately is signed, sealed and delivered. Agreements in principle have had an uncomfortable habit of blowing up, and so we shall wait and see what happens before accepting the treaty as an accomplished fact.

If this agreement does work out as scheduled, it will be agreeable to the Western powers. One reason is that the Russians will have to withdraw their troops from
