Night Fall Of Independence Day Related By Writer In Story Of Today's Southland

(By HAL BOYLE) NEW YORK — (AP) — The evening sun sank in red fire across the hills of the southland, and the scent of pine rose strong and clear in the cooling air. There was the sound of hammering in the back yard of the weathered unpainted shanty leaning against the hillside. A small boy in patched trousers came down the road, scuffing his bare toes in the dust. He turned in at the broken gate, swinging on a single hinge, and walked around behind the shanty. He stopped and looked with interest at a burly man in stained overalls kneeling on the ground. The man was nailing a short crossbar to a long piece of wood sharpened at one end.

"What you makin', papa?" asked the boy. "The big man, started, turned in alarm, his hammer upraised. "Otie! Git in the house!" "It looks like the cross we have in Sunday School," said the boy. "You goin' to take it to church?"

The man turned to the house. "Ella!" he called. "Git that boy inside!" A thin woman in a slack dress walked to the porch, and pushed the screen door open. The door, its spring strained by rust and wind, banged against the porch wall and stayed there. "Come in, Otie," said his mother. "I been waitin' supper."

"But what's pap doin'?" said the small boy, as he turned to the door. "Gettin' ready to go to a party," replied the woman. "He's gettin' quite social these nights—your papa is." "Shut your mouth!" said the big man. "Maybe if you was less social they'd be more to eat in this house," she said bitterly.

celebrate Independence Day." "Sparklers!" he wailed. "I ast you for firecrackers. Sparklers is for girls. I don't want no sparklers. I'd druther go with papa." He looked up at her, his small face full of exciting cunning. "I know where he's goin'—to a cross burnin'. Who they gonna git this time?"

It was then his mother's hand struck him in the face. He began to blubber, and she began to cry dully, too, there in the flickering lamplight of a shanty where she knew she now lived all by herself.

Live Lobsters In Tub Too Much, Rules Judge

BALTIMORE, July 5 — (AP) — Live lobsters in the boarding house bathtub?

That is just positively, finally and completely too much. So said the landlady, Mrs. Philip J. Padovan, today. She told Police Judge James Cadden that she was mad enough when 52-year-old Perce J. Spence insisted on keeping a pigeon, several dogs and at least one cat in his room.

Then came the lobster, which she found swimming around in the bathtub. Floating in the water were a

Phone Workers Brand Unwanted Pay Hike As Scheme For Rates Boost

SEATTLE, July 5. — (AP) — Eight thousand telephone workers in Washington and Northern Idaho got pay raises previously rejected by their union.

The Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company said the increases were granted following termination June 30, of a contract with the CIO-Communications Workers of America, after the required 60-day notice.

E. J. Follis, president of the Washington-Idaho plant local of the union, expressed belief the company's action was an unfair labor practice. He said the union rejected the offer in March because it was discriminatory between classes.

The increases, applying to non-supervisory employees, will total $1,200,000 a year. Follis also said the company, in granting the increases, "is using its employees as guinea pigs in an effort to get a rate increase."

The Washington State Public Service Commission denied the company an interim rate increase last week because, among other factors, it had not reached an agreement with the union and was not paying the increased wages.

The increases will range from $2 to $6 a week in Seattle and other "A" cities and from $1 to $5 elsewhere, a company spokesman said. For accounting employees, it will range from $2 to $4 weekly here and will be $2 in Spokane. Increases for commercial and traffic employees range from $1 to $4. Supervisory employes, not represented by the union, were given increases last October.
