like the story of the man who won a prize for knocking down all the pigeons at a shooting gallery, when actually he was aiming at the clay pipes. In his early years, Art discovered an inborn love for music. So-he'd be singer . . . and at 18, he was off to Chicago to work daytimes and study evenings. While in the Army during World War I, Art discovered he could serve as a song leader, and at times he led as many as 10,000 troops in singing. After the war he traveled for many years with touring evangelists . . . thence, to California where he opened an ap pliance store, but had to close shop . . . his assets frozen during the depression. Answering a blind ad, he secured a job at Forest Lawn Memorial Park, where he gave pep talks to salesmen and lectured on the famous "Last Supper" stained glass window. And when Forest Lawn commenced its radio program, Tapestries of Life," it was decided to place Art in the narrator's job, since he seemed to have "a pretty good voice," and, besides, was already on the payroll. Once inside the inner sanctum of radio, Art was a natural. He won his first audition for General Mills against 30 top-flight announcers. "Bob Baker, the Bisquick Maker," he was known as. From there, he announced on the biggest-name shows in radio and at one time was carrying 22 shows a week. Starting Art Baker's Notebook" in 1938, he's devoted almost entirely his full time to the Notebook which recently observed its tenth anniversary on KFI.

Art's sojourn in the movies was equally unplotted. Columbia was producing a picture which called for a radio broadcasting scene, featuring Gabriel Heater. But, for some reason, Mr. Heater and the studio weren't able to get together. Somehow Art Baker was called for the job. As it turned out the picture was released to the public with Art being soberly addressed as "Mr. Heatter."

From that tiny start, he was soon called for a role in Alfred Hitchcock's SPELLBOUND. Then came a whole host of parts. But from the start he really didn't GO to. It just happened. It's just one of those things.

Spread Of Communism In Asia Prompts Proposed Pacific Pact

By JAMES D. WHITE

Associated Press Foreign News Analyst

As the cold war grips East Asia, it is only natural that political leaders there should get together on how to stop the spread of communism.

This is one reason, but by no means the only reason, that the 'retired" generalissimo of China, Chiang Kal-Shek, and President Elipdio Quirino of the Philippines have met and agreed to form an anti-Communist union of countries in the western Pacific. It could serve a variety of other purposes.
