War Record of New Army Staff Head Matched By Few American Generals

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Gen. J. Lawton Collins, the new army chief of staff, earned his nickname—"Lightning Joe"—on many battlefields.

The graying, 53-year-old soldier—one of the handsomest men in the army—was one of the most colorful and energetic field commanders of the second world war.

He was tough and cool and won his battles first hand. He ran his famous seventh corps as efficiently as any top business executive. An all around soldier, he could plan a battle, fight it through—and encourage his own front-line troops with his presence.

This was his battle formula: "Outguess the enemy, keep him off balance and never stop driving."

Some generals are boxers, and some are punchers. "Lightning Joe" is a puncher. It was his faculty of sustained drive that led Gen. Omar Nelson Bradley to give him the critical battle assignments that built his fame.

And few generals in American history can match his combat record. His victories stretch from Guadalcanal to the Elbe. Collins came to Europe after successfully completing the mop-up of Japanese on Guadalcanal and New Guinea.

His seventh corps seized Utah beach in Normandy. It freed Cherbourg, the first French metropolis liberated from the Nazis. It broke the crust at St. Lo. It was first to crack the Siegfried line and capture a major German city—Aachen. It took Cologne, too, expanded the first bridgehead across the Rhine at Remagen, and at war's end linked up with the Russians along the Elbe.

Wins By Disobeying Monty But "Lightning Joe," who never dodged a scrap, once got into a fight he wasn't looking for. It happened in the "Battle of the Bulge" in Belgium in December, 1944. The German breakthrough imperiled the American line of communications, and Gen. Eisenhower temporarily put his thought his orders had been disregarded, sent a rebuke through channels. But when he learned the full story he sent his compliments to Collins and Harmon.

The battle had turned out to be one of "Lightning Joe's" best blitzes.

Navy Mothers to Meet — The Navy Mothers club will meet at 8 o'clock tonight at the First Baptist church.
