

Maryland's Restrictions On Crime Publicity Face Supreme Court Test

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2.—(AP)—The fight over when—and how much—Baltimoreans should know about crimes committed in their city has landed in the supreme court.

The state of Maryland petitioned the nation's highest tribunal to reinstate all of rule 904 of the supreme bench of Baltimore. Designed to protect a man's right to an impartial trial, the rule restricts the publication of crime news.

The Maryland Court of Appeals—the state's highest court—recently threw out a vital section of the code, declaring that it abridged constitutional guarantees of a free press and free speech.

In effect for 10 years, this section prohibited newspapers and radio stations from reporting that a defendant had confessed in criminal case.

Another part of the rule prohibits police from issuing any statement about a case between the time the defendant is arrested and brought to trial. This section is still in force.

Five radio stations were cited for contempt in Baltimore last year. One was absolved, but the others were fined $100 to $500.

The appeals court upset three of the four convictions; an appeal is pending in the others. The Baltimore court was ordered to strike out the sections and rule 904 applying to publications and radio stations.

The appellate decision held that the defendant in the case did not lose his right to an impartial trial because of the broadcast, which reported either that he had confessed or had a previous criminal record.

In asking the supreme court of the United States to review the court of appeals ruling, Attorney General Hall Hammond argued that:

1.—The exact questions raised in the prosecution of the stations have never before been considered by the federal court.

2.—The ruling was not a very appropriate application of supreme court decisions on similar questions.

3.—The broadcasts were a "clear and present danger" to the defendant's right to a fair trial.

The supreme court has a "clear and present danger" doctrine which it frequently applies in civil rights and contempt rulings. It means that something must have more than just a tendency to cause trouble or hamper justice before it can be punished.

RETURNS TO PULPIT—Reverend Walter MacArthur, above, will return to his pulpit at First Methodist church Sunday, September 4, after a six weeks vacation. During his absence he attended two conferences, one at Tacoma, Wash., the other at Asilomar, Calif. While vacationing in Long Beach, Calif., he gave numerous sermons and told of his various experiences abroad last summer.

New Students At OSC Interested In Success Aids

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—Recent public discussion failure of many students to "make the grade" in college has greatly increased the interest of parents, prospective students, and high school officials in this subject, reports Dallas Norton, assistant registrar in charge of admissions, and personnel coordinator.

Many parents have come to the college with sons or daughters for personal interviews and others have written to enquire about desirable next steps to be taken following high school graduation.

Norton keeps in constant touch with local high school officials and finds them keenly interested in seeing that students planning to go to college get the courses and develop the necessary habits and attitudes to prepare them for college work.

More and more use is being made of the advance testing service provided by the college for students uncertain as to their selection of a course in college or of their aptitude for certain studies. Some of the highest ranking students in the high school classes as well as some in the doubtful ranks are making use of this service this summer, says Norton.

Those wishing to make use of this advisory testing service are asked to contact the registrar's office for an appointment before coming to the campus.
