

Cartoonist Hatlo's Fan Mail Reads Like That Of Lonely Hearts Columnist

CARTOONIST and Mrs. Jimmy Hatlo display Bo Bo and family. Hatlo is creator of the famed cartoon, "They'll Do It Every Time."

By JIMMY HATLO

There are times when, in drawing "They'll Do It Every Time," I feel as if I'm running a lonely-hearts club.

For example I get a letter from Joe Doakes wanting me to do a cartoon needing the guy in my office who's always borrowing dough. I do it, and the next week I get a flood of letters beginning, "Dear Mr. Hatlo: Will you please forward the enclosed note to Joe Doakes?" The note hit the mail on the head. Why, there's a lug in MY office who...

The next thing you know, there is a hard and fast friendship and I'm the little master of ceremonies who brought them together.

Shows Promise

The Hatlo story began in Providence, R. I. in 1898. My family moved to California a year later, however, so I feel pretty free to call myself a Californian. I went to school in Los Angeles and they tell me I had some promise as an artist, but somehow I didn't get into the business at first. I drifted into advertising and I got mixed up with doing publicity for automobile firms and later became auto editor of the old San Francisco Bulletin.

But I guess the urge to draw was pretty strong. I found myself giving a sales talk to the Call's sports editor about one of my cartoons, and the next thing, there I was doing editorial and political cartoons. My big break came when the Call Bulletin asked me to do a sports page panel to replace that drawn by the late, great T. A. "Ted" Dorgan, which King Features Syndicate picked up to syndicate nationally.

Marriage Told
I married Eleanor Dollard in 1937 after we met when one of my drawings was auctioned off at an Ad Club football dinner in San Francisco and she bought it. We live in Carmel-by-the-Sea in California. Eight months ago we were blessed with a son who I hope will grow up to be something else than a cartoonist.

I get a lot bigger kick out of drawing comics than I did doing times I feel that they expound my philosophies more effectively and reach a lot more people. I'd sooner draw than walk, anyway, and I hope I always can continue to draw funny pictures.

Canada Border Crossings Reach Record Figures

VANCOUVER, B. C., Sept. 7.—(AP)—The Department of Immigration said today border crossings at Douglas, B. C., and Blaine, Wash., on the United States side reached an all-time high over the Labor day weekend.

From Friday evening until midnight Sunday 30,988 persons crossed the border. This figure is "about 5,000" over the previous mark, the department said. Another 13,000 persons crossed from Huntington, B. C., to Sumas, Wash.
