

Dr. Haskins Takes Stand As Witness

States Victoria Could Have Had Amnesia From Shock Of Ralph's Death

If Victoria Sanders had been "feigning amnesia" at the time of Ralph Mojonner's death, and—conscience-stricken—decided to tell her story to the police, she would have "told all, the stand John L. Haskins, psychiatrist and manager of the Roseburg Veterans hospital, who took the stand as a surprise witness in the Victoria Sanders murder trial yesterday.

Dr. Haskins was called by the defense after Victoria had left the stand. He said he had not interviewed her, but had listened to all of her testimony yesterday, and had read her signed statements.

He said that an overwhelming emotional shock, seriously involving someone they care for, would be enough to send persons into a state of amnesia for varying periods.

Defense Against Shock

Amnesia, he said, is one of the defenses against shock. No one likes to consider emotional problems, he explained, and one of the best defenses is the ability to "forget things."

"Assuming, doctor, that we have a girl 20 years of age, with a background of no home life, of average intelligence, no record of crime, torn between her love of a man and her religion, living with him, but not married, and bearing his child, and she was innocent of the crime and found him dead in bed; would it be possible for her to have a shock like that you describe?" asked Defense Attorney Paul E. Godden.

"There is not a doubt that this girl has been mentally ill," Dr. Haskins said. The state of amnesia resulting from such shock, he added, could last "a few hours or a few years."

When the mental block of amnesia is broken, Dr. Haskins said, the person would be "apt to tell the whole story," keeping nothing back.

Whole Story or None
If Victoria had been guilty and "blacked out," Dr. Haskins testified, her story, when it came, would be either "none or all."

Under cross-examination, Dr. Haskins admitted that amnesia would just as likely result if Victoria had killed Ralph "in a rage" while he was drunk.

"Real amnesia," Dr. Haskins said, "is the blocking off of certain events in a person's life. When the mental block is broken, all events occurring during the period of amnesia would come back."

"A person feigning amnesia would fill in his story with 'bizarre details,' and if involved in a crime, he might try to fix the blame on some else," Dr. Haskins said.

If Victoria had "feigned amnesia," he said, she would have "told all."

nesia," and then was conscience-stricken, it would not have helped her conscience to keep back any of the details, the doctor testified.

In the trial, Victoria has testified that she was in a "daze" when she left the Mojonner home, two miles west of Drain, the morning of Oct. 28, 1947, and she did not remember seeing Ralph dead on the bed.

She said she came out of her daze Nov. 13, 1947, in the Douglas county jail, when she cut her finger on a broken medicine bottle. With the sight of blood, her memory came back, but she still denied killing Ralph.

In cross-examination of Victoria yesterday afternoon, District Attorney Robert G. Davis asked, "Is it not a fact that you were remembering blood on your hands from touching Ralph's body, when you cut your fingers on the bottle?"

"No, I just saw blood and everything went black," Victoria replied.

Was Hysterical
Victoria was hysterical when she was found by Deputy Sheriff and Mrs. J. H. Williams, who came to her aid at the time she cut her finger. When she had been "calmed down," she freely gave them a statement of what she remembered, she testified.

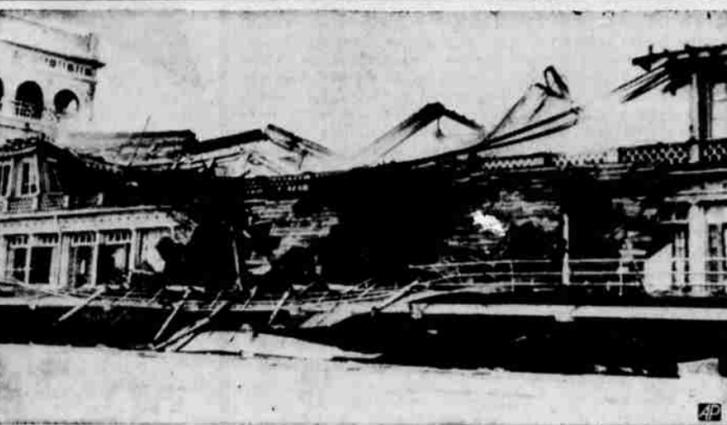

After both the state and defense had rested yesterday, Dudley Walton, assistant district attorney, opened the arguments with a review of testimony in the trial. The arguments were expected to continue most of today.

Circuit Judge Carl E. Wimberly cautioned jurors to bring their toilet articles and pajamas today, as it might be necessary for them to stay overnight before arriving at a verdict.
