

Russian On Trial Pretends No Knowledge Of English

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—(AP)—Start of the trial of Judith Coplon and Russian Engineer Valentine A. Gubitchev was delayed Wednesday while a federal judge tried to determine whether the Russian understands English.

Judge William Bondy called in an interpreter when Gubitchev, who spoke English fluently in previous court appearances, answered all his questions in Russian.

Through the interpreter, Gubitchev, a U. N. employee, declined to say whether he was ready for trial, maintaining the court has no jurisdiction over him because he has diplomatic immunity. Miss Coplon, already under 40 months to 10 years sentence for stealing confidential FBI papers with the intention of passing them to soviet agents, sat impassively in the courtroom. She is free in $20,000 bail pending appeal.

Lay a casserole alternately with cooked broad noodles and cooked flaked fish; moisten with diluted condensed tomato soup, top with buttered crumbs, and bake in a moderate oven until the topping is lightly browned.

Permit Required To Cut Trees For Christmas Sale

SALEM, Ore.—(Special)—Christmas is still many days away, but already the Christmas tree cutters are combing the Oregon woods for likely holiday greens. However, according to George Spaur, the acting state forester, any Christmas trees harvested for commercial purposes must be cut under the provisions of the Oregon conservation act and a permit secured prior to cutting. Spaur stated that permits can be secured from the forestry department in Salem or from the nearest State Forester within the various districts throughout the state. The forester also stated that the landowner's permission must be secured and his name and address included on the application filed by the Christmas tree operator.

The Oregon act requires that forest lands be kept in a productive and growing state after the removal of timber or other forest crops. Under these provisions, the commercial Christmas tree operator is required to leave not less than 300 trees per acre, with 100 well distributed. Old mature seed trees may also serve as a seed source where they exist on Christmas tree cutting areas. By leaving established young growth or seed source, continued forest production on the area is insured. All forest lands come within these requirements except lands which are being cleared for agricultural purposes.

Exemption Provided
Mr. John Citizen, who wants to take his family out on the weekend and cut his own Christmas tree, is not required to obtain a permit. He must, however, first obtain the landowner's permission before cutting his tree. The forester was emphatic, however, that he was not opposed to Old St. Nick and the Christmas tree harvest. "It is a custom long established, and nothing should be done to interfere with it," said Spaur. "However, there are certain requirements which must be met if Oregon's forests are to be kept in a productive condition. The conservation act sets out these requirements, and if followed, the harvest of the trees can be in the nature of a beneficial thinning."

Application forms and permits may be obtained at state forestry headquarters at Coos Bay, La Grande, The Dalles, Klamath Falls, Medford, Toledo, Forest Grove, Roseburg, Sweet Home, Molalla, Dallas, Springfield, Veneta, and Salem.

Suicide Prevented By Long Distance Phone Call

HOUSTON, Tex., Nov. 10.—(AP)—A long distance telephone call from Louisville, Ky., was credited with preventing a 33-year-old divorcee from committing suicide here today.

Homicide Detective S. G. Farris said a man called him at 3:40 a. m. from Louisville and said his divorced wife had phoned from Houston and said: "I'm just calling to say goodbye."

Police had trouble locating the woman but finally did so by telephone. As Farris talked to her, other police sped to her apartment.

The apartment was filled with gas and four gas burners were open, officers said.

The woman was taken to police headquarters where she was released to her attorney.

U. S. Plans To Bar Technical Data From Reds

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—(AP)—The Commerce department announced a "voluntary" plan today to keep important, though non-secret, American technical information from going out to Russia and her satellites.

While iron curtain countries were not mentioned in the announcement the aim was obvious.

HAVE YOU READ

"Brief, Gaudy Hour" by Margaret Campbell Barnes (MacRae - Smith Company, Philadelphia, 1949).

In this novel of Anne Boleyn, Mrs. Barnes attempts to re-create the world of Henry VIII. She makes it a reflection of our own modern world.

She has attempted to show the complexities of Anne Boleyn's character. She has succeeded in weaving together the warring views of pro-Boleyn and anti-Boleyn historians.

She has attempted to apologize for Henry VIII and very nearly makes a human being out of him.

The verdict: Good reading, but "take it with a grain of salt."

Blind Girl (With Dog) Wins Roses For Car In Traffic

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 10.—(AP)—Blind Louise Pickens won a dozen roses from the Police department Wednesday for being one of Montgomery's most careful pedestrians.

It was part of a traffic safety campaign during which flowers are awarded daily to pedestrians who obey traffic regulations.

Said patrolman Roland L. Banville in handing the roses to Miss Pickens:

"Every day I see people with better eyesight than I've got and they don't pay any attention to traffic."

The blind candy shop operator modestly gave her seeing-eye dog, "Lady," credit for the citation.

Simultaneously, the department slapped another 60 classes of "highly strategic" goods under rigid export license control to prevent reshipment from original destinations to the Soviet bloc.

Russia and her satellites have been banned since March, 1948, from getting direct from the U. S. industrial goods which might add to their war potential.

The government is now seeking to block chances of such goods getting to the iron curtain sector in a roundabout way by re-shipments from such spots as Communist China, other Asiatic points, or Latin America.
