hated" in the Middle East. "Egypt is unwilling to admit that such a country as Israel exists."

Gulley arrived in the Middle East at a strategic time, as the birth of the new nation of Israel. He saw the first national assembly and heard the first speech by Ben Gurion, the president. He saw some of the things the new nation is setting out to do—granting the right to vote, the right of assembly and free speech, and of recourse to the courts.

Jewish Situation Told

Israel has an immigration problem. Jewish immigrants are arriving from Europe at the rate of 1,000 a day. At one camp he visited, people there spoke 20 different languages, which meant they had the background and traditions of 20 different countries.

The Jewish people occupy only two-thirds of what formerly was Palestine. They are surrounded on all sides by Arab states. Israel's only exportable commodity is citrus fruit. The country has no natural resources and no manufacturing, except that of chocolate and diamond cutting.

Agencies of the United Nations are doing "a magnificent job" of relief in the Middle East. Co-operating with the United Nations are the League of Red Cross Societies, International Red Cross committee, and the American Friends Service committee.

Gulley described the immensity of the task of caring for the refugees. He was stationed near Gaza, where there was still fighting when he arrived. The country was under martial law. There were no organizations on which to call for help in feeding and housing nearly a quarter-million people.

Both Sides Adherent
"I did get a chance to see both sides," said Gulley. He visited the Middle Eastern states, to try to reach a settlement of the refugee problem. The Jewish nation would not settle the problem until peace treaties were signed; the Arab nations would not sign treaties until the refugees had been taken care of.

As a member of the Newberg, Ore., Rotary club, Gulley visited the Rotary club at Alexandria, Egypt, where the meeting was conducted in French. He said the meeting was interrupted in order that a collection for refugee relief might be taken up.

Stronger Arms Urged By General Beecher

their families were invited to a potluck lunch at the armory. Peace Still To Be Won his address, Gen. Beecher declared that "the peace is not yet won." Americans must individually and collectively take positive action "to the end that future sacrifices on the field of battle will not be demanded." He continued:

"Two great wars have been fought by our country within the last three decades. They were necessary wars in defense of our rights and freedom. We might have escaped them, however, had we taken proper precautions during the years preceding the out-

Funeral Services Set For Dirk John Van Dyke

Funeral services for Dirk John Van Dyke, 75, who died Nov. 8, will be held in The Chapel of The Roses, Roseburg Funeral home, Saturday, Nov. 12 at 2 p. m., with Rev. W. A. MacArthur officiating.

Van Dyke, resident of this community for over 45 years, was born March 19, 1874 in Meeker county, Minn. He was a former postmaster at Drew and the Van Dyke pass was named after him. He was also an employee of the forest service for a number of years. He was a member of the Elks lodge 326 of Roseburg.

Surviving are his daughter, Mrs. Ruby Hart, Eugene, and two step-sons: Walter Farris, Portland.

Interment will follow in the Masonic cemetery.

breaks. "We who live must fight to keep peace in the world if we would preserve our democracy, just as those whom we honor today died on the battlefield to defend it. If we fail in this endeavor, we are not worthy of the sacrifices that have been made for us."

"If the decision rested with us, the people of the United States, the way would be easy. We are not aggressors, we want no war; we want nothing that any other country possesses. We pour out our treasures to help the unfortunate and the distressed and we have extended the hand of friendship to every country in the world. But to what avail?

"One greedy nation, drunk with power, dominated by a small handful of unscrupulous despots preaching a spurious doctrine of democracy opposes our efforts on every hand. Treaty violators, instigators of blood purges, oppressors of the weak—these are the people with whom we have to negotiate for world peace."

"Can it be done?" Gen. Beecher asked. "I say it must be done, but we must take no chances in the process."

Until the world adopts the Golden Rule and the principle of the brotherhood of man, Americans should heed the Biblical injunction, "When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace," declared Gen. Beecher.

He warned that the United States must have an adequate armed force—trained individuals in the regular and reserve components of the armed services and an industrial establishment capable of supporting all-out war, and bases from which the forces can operate.

The United States must give support to the United Nations, said the general. Also, Americans must also practice democracy in their daily lives and pay their

Julius Krug Resigns As Secretary Of Interior

"been able to do better by him than that."

Krug had nothing to say of his plans. He has an interest in a Tennessee Textile mill—in an area where, 10 years ago, he was chief power engineer for the Tennessee Valley authority.

Chapman's Service Notable
Chapman likewise had no comment. He has been a member of the so-called "little cabinet" for 16 1/2 years.

He became assistant secretary of the interior in May, 1933, under Secretary Harold I. Ickes. He served as acting secretary in the six-week interim between resignation and Krug's appointment, and became undersecretary the day after Krug took office in March, 1946.

He served on Navy transports during world war 1 and was once referee and chief probation officer of the late Judge Ben B. Lindsey's famous Juvenile and Domestic relations court in Denver.

Chapman was "advance man" for President Truman's western campaign travels last year, and was credited with much of the success of the tour.

Campaign Laxity Charged
Krug, on the other hand, was roundly criticized by the party faithful for not campaigning more ardently in 1948. Krug spoke for Mr. Truman in the pre-convention campaigning, but was not as active in speech-making thereafter as some of his cabinet colleagues.

There have been other differences between Krug and Mr. Truman since then.

The president recently vetoed a Navajo rehabilitation bill because of an amendment, said to have been accepted by Krug, which would have made the Indians subject to state laws.

The president's comments on two recent reclamation proposals also appeared critical of the six-foot-four, 200-pound-plus "baby" of the cabinet. He reluctantly approved one, but vetoed the other on grounds that the interior department's reclamation bureau had not established its feasibility.

Keep Armed Power Strong, U. S. Warned

"within the dark shadow" of the atomic bomb.

One reason, he said, is that the United States and other nations failed to achieve enduring peace after the First World War.

Goal Not Yet Achieved
Johnson, in his speech, recalled how he saw Armistice day come while he was in the Army in Europe.

"Today," he said, "we have none of the delusions we had on our first Armistice day. Today we have accepted the meaning of the word 'armistice' in its literal sense—the cessation of physical combat." He added:

"We accept Armistice day as worthy of celebration—but we also take it as a day of notice, notice to us that though the guns be stilled, the fight for the right and the light against the evil and the dark is everlasting and demands eternal vigilance."

Turning to the subject of service unification and economy Johnson said:

"In the department of defense we have already effected a number of economies and we will continue to make many others until we are wholly convinced that the fat and the gravy have been removed from military and naval operations."

"But in this necessary process, we have not, and shall not, in any way weaken our defenses."

debt "to the brave young men whom we honor today" by striving and praying "for the peace and security for which they fought."

Truman Again Hits At Race Discrimination

women are being systematically persecuted for their religious beliefs. Campaigns are being waged to turn religion into a tool of the state."

Congress To Get New Plea

The president's heavy emphasis on the need for legislation to end discriminatory practices in this country left little doubt that he will renew his appeal for such laws in his state of the union message to congress in January.

Mr. Truman's civil rights program includes measures to make lynching a federal offense, ban the poll tax as a voting requirement in federal elections, and end discrimination in hiring because of color, race or religion.

His sponsorship of that program cost him the electoral votes of four southern states in last year's presidential election. "If we look at ourselves in the true spirit of brotherhood," Mr. Truman said, "we must acknowledge that in the United States there are instances of discrimination and injustice because of difference in color, religion or national origin."

"But we are working diligently to overcome these violations of the fundamental faith which holds us together."
