Let's Talk Things Over

I was at a party the other night—just a neighbourly get-together—and I overheard one lady say: "I don't know much about my husband's business. I've a full-time job looking after the home and the children."

And it's quite a job, too. Hundreds of thousands of women are doing the same thing. And the mother carries most of the load in keeping her husband and family in good health, in shaping the character of the children, in organizing the home life, and so on.

But there's one important part of her husband's business that she should know about. It's important because it affects her life, and the future of the children. It might even mean all the difference between security and despair. It's the matter of life insurance. If the unexpected should happen—and it does—every housewife and mother should have the protection which only life insurance can give.

Yes, that part of her husband's business is really important, and every housewife and mother should know about it. What life insurance has, and is it enough to give the family a reasonable chance to carry on if the wage-earner died?

I'd like to step in sometime and talk over this important business before it's too late. Let's talk things over—today!
