Lincoln County Rancher Goes To Trial For Murder

TOLEDO, Ore., Nov. 30.—(P)—Homer Edwards, 52-year-old rancher went on trial Monday for the slaying of one of two brothers found dead on a brushy path Oct. 13.

A jury panel of 116 persons—probably the largest ever called in Lincoln county—was on deck as the jury selection began.

The prospective jurors crowded circuit judge Fred McHenry's court room so much that no spectators could come in at all. The county engineer has limited the number of spectators to 100 throughout the trial, as a safety precaution in the old frame court house building.

Edwards was charged with first degree murder in the slaying of Melvin Longyear, 26, and Charles Longyear, 22. A sheriff's posse found them on a trail in the Nashville district in eastern Lincoln county, after Edwards came to the sheriff to say there had been a quarrel.

The trial is based on Melvin Longyear's slaying.

Gasoline Prices Slipping From 23-Year Peak

By RADER WINGET
NEW YORK.—(P)—There's a tiny dip in gasoline prices that will bear watching. The average cost of fuel to the motorist is slipping away from the highest peak in 23 years.

The cause is the weather which has been blowing hot and cold at the wrong time. Carefully made calculations of petroleum experts have been upset. In their efforts to do something about it, they have shaved prices on various types of fuel.

But in the midst of it, filling station price wars have broken out here and there around the country. The motorist has the advantage of this cut-throat competition. Such price wars are a red flag to the big operators. They watch them carefully and note their extent and duration.

You shouldn't get the idea from all this that you can drive into your corner gas station and fill er up at a big saving today. Gasoline prices are on a regional basis. Some dealers have cut and some haven't. And the price war areas are small.

Throughout the United States, the average price of gasoline in filling stations of 50 representative cities started out this month at 20.33 cents a gallon. That is without taxes. These average 6.64 cents a gallon, a record.

In mid-summer the average price was 20.41 cents a gallon in these same cities. That's the highest price on gas since the average for 1926 which was 20.97 cents.

So this month's average is only 8-100ths of a cent lower than that 23-year high point.

But it is lower. That's the important point. And right now the big producers and distributors are inching their wholesale prices still lower by a few tenths of a cent along the eastern seaboard and sections of the south and midwest.

Some have cut their prices at the retail level. So far that has been restrained. The wholesale cuts are so new—and the general situation is so uncertain—that there hasn't been a general move yet to pass the savings along to the ultimate consumer.

The crystal detector, means of introducing radio to a lot of folks in the early days of radio, was the result of work of Greenleaf W. Pickard, American scientist.

The average hen will lay somewhere between 180 and 345 eggs per year depending upon the breed and various other conditions.
