Washington May Lose $30 Million In Traffic Violator Faces Everything In The Book U. S. Aid For Social Security Role

OLYMPIA, Wash., Dec. 3.-(P)-Washington's tottering financial structure was further endangered today by the possible loss of approximately $30,000,000 in federal matching funds for the social security program.

An authoritative source who declined to be quoted by name revealed that there is a strong possibility the federal government may issue an ultimatum on the subject.

It would, in effect, give the

If the federal government should issue its ultimatum, as an authoritative source here says they may, the state has two methods of bringing its laws into conformity with federal regulations if it wishes to continue receiving federal matching funds:

1. By legislative action—at

It would, in effect, give the state of Washington a certain period of time in which to bring its social security laws into conformity with federal regulations or, in lieu thereof, lose its federal matching funds.

Federal regulations require that social security records of individuals receiving public assistance shall be kept confidential.
