

Slays Husband Over Letter From Another Woman

NEW YORK, Dec. 29.—(AP)—Mrs. Joseph Falla, accused of stabbing her husband to death with two steak knives, will be arraigned on a homicide charge as soon as she recovers from an overdose of sleeping medicine, police said.

Her handsome, six-foot husband died under the family Christmas tree from 13 stab wounds while his horrified children looked on.

The children, Joseph, 12, and Camilla, 10, and Mrs. Falla told police the quarrel started when she found two letters from another woman in Falla's coat pocket.

In a few moments the argument turned to a slashing attack as the enraged wife snatched up the knives and drove her husband from kitchen to living room, police said. After Falla fell, she gulped down the sleeping tablets and was waiting, weeping, when police came.

Falla, 38, was a wealthy Bronx dress manufacturer. His blood stained a $5,000 mink coat he had placed under the Christmas tree as a gift for his 32-year-old wife.

Detectives said Mrs. Falla told them that every time she asked her husband about the other woman he told her she ought to see a psychiatrist.

She had an appointment with one for the Friday before Christmas, but broke it to attend her husband's office party.

URBANA, Ill. — (AP) — The University of Illinois is making polite limburger cheese—it smells, but not insultingly.

The art is to hand-pick the bacteria that make the flavors and aroma. Limburger is made of whole milk. The process is described by Dr. S. L. Tuckey, associate professor of dairy technology.

Employment Service Set Up To Provide Opportunities For Workers And Employers

(Ed. Note: This is the first of three articles written by George T. Foster, Roseburg branch office manager of the Oregon State Employment Service, relating its history and functions.)
By GEORGE T. FOSTER

Economic conditions being in the state that they were in 1933, Congress passed an act that created state employment offices, whereby workers and employers would have a common ground on which to meet, that their wants could be satisfied. The employment service was to be handled as a service to employers and workers alike on a "free" basis, with no charge to either party for services rendered.

At that time workers were aimlessly wandering about attempting to find jobs; and, when jobs did occur, employers were confronted with the problem of having to interview many more applicants than necessary to find a qualified person. Using offices whereby workers could be registered according to the type of work that they were best qualified to perform, the elimination of a lot of unnecessary interviewing was brought about. The employer merely had to place an order describing the type of work to be done, the experience required for the job and only applicants meeting the requirements of the order would be referred to the employer for interview.

The Roseburg office was originally set-up in 1934 in the building now occupied by the Local Loan company on North Jackson street. Frank W. Chase, manager, served in that capacity until his retirement July 1, 1947. From the original location the office was moved to its present quarters at 437 North Jackson street.

From 1934 until the war years, many federal projects were handled through the facilities of the office. The major one of these projects was the administration of the Work Projects administration.

In 1935 Congress passed the Social Security act which provided old age benefits and survivor's insurance for persons reaching age 65. In addition to the act, they created an Unemployment Insurance act to provide workers out of employment, through no fault of their own, with certain stipulated amounts during their period of unemployment, providing that they had earned wage credits during the base year. Payroll deductions for unemployment compensation started Jan. 1, 1937, while contributions to Federal Old Age benefits began Jan. 1, 1938.

A common error is made in confusing federal old age benefits and unemployment compensation. In the state of Oregon deductions from workers' pay checks are made for old age benefits, but none are made for unemployment compensation. Funds for the latter are derived solely from an employers' payroll tax. The administration of the unemployment benefits was placed in the hands of the agency responsible for the Employment Service. This program accepted and paid its first claims beginning with Jan. 1, 1938, and was under the supervision of Oscar M. Berrie, who is still connected with the commission but now in the capacity of a field auditor.

The complete function of the office at this time was to try to provide employment for those seeking it; and, in the event that none was available, to accept

Service to refer only qualified applicants to an employer for interview. The employer is under no obligation to employ any person referred to him. The order blanks are very specific as to the applicant's physical requirements and also contain a very specific summary of the work to be performed. In this manner the applicant knows what is to be expected with regard to hours of work, wages, pay dates and the type of machinery. If it pertains that he will be required to work with.

In addition, the information is on the order blank with respect to whether or not membership in a union is involved, whether or not any special skills, knowledges or abilities are required, the educational and physical requirements necessary and length of requirements for him, the interview then can refer to the employer only these applicants whose work history and physical capacities meet the needs as outlined on the order blank. The purpose of this, sometimes believed to be unimportant information, goes a long way in eliminating the unnecessary interviewing that employers find necessary to do before securing a suitable applicant.

their claim for unemployment compensation. Basically, today the same two major functions are in existence.

In 1939 a Dictionary of Occupational Titles was published in which were listed approximately 26,000 different job titles, a description of the job and a code number. The purpose of this volume was to readily identify job orders as well as registered applicants. When an employer places his order for a specific type of worker; the order is coded with the proper occupational title and code and placed in the order file. The file of registered applicants is then checked and all application cards bearing the same code number are taken from the file and screened for referral to the employer. It is the policy of the Employment
