Storm Victim's Body Recovered

GRANTS PASS.—(P)—The body of storm victim Bonnie McNeil, 63, was brought out of the rugged Althouse-Sucker creek area Saturday by use of a Tucker snow-cat from Medford. Coroner Virgil Hull said an entry in McNeil's diary Monday indicated he planned to try to break a trail into the marooned Oregon Caves. Two caretakers, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Ingram, were found safe. Caves resort property was little damaged by the heavy snowfall, Manager James Christianson said in Grants Pass.

The body of a second victim, Loyel Johnston, who died from exhaustion while trying to make his way from the caves Tuesday, was recovered early Friday.

Johnston's body was found by two Canyonville men, Guy Edney and Ralph Sheppard, who walked out to civilization Thursday. They, with Fred Schroeder and Jack Taber, also of Canyonville, were employees of a s-rinker company, who had become snowbound at the Caves while doing installation work at the resort building.

Schroeder and Taber reportedly had attempted to secure aid earlier for those still marooned at the lodge, but had been unable to do so. Young Johnston, according to Edney and Sheppard, had started out alone, in an effort to make his way to civilization. He reportedly had been suffering from a toothache.

It Takes Money To Run Fair Deal; Nation's Business Must Be Good

By PETER EDSON
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—President Truman's Economic Report spells out a five-year plan for the United States. The State of the Union message was more on the order of a 50-year plan, looking ahead to the year 2000 Anno Democratica. It was written in broad generalities. But this Economic Report is concerned principally with 1950-1954, inclusive, and it is full of specific though controversial proposals.

The keynote of this Economic Report seems to be in the President's statement, "... economic affairs are not beyond human control." Opposition of the Truman administration and philosophy may see in this phrase the old bogey of "government planning" rearing its head again.

The President builds up his theme by statements that many of his critics will dispute. In his State of the Union message the President said that "Government programs for maintaining employment and purchasing power have been of tremendous benefit" in meeting and reversing the recession of 1949.

The President repeats this idea in his Economic Report. He says: "The relatively safe passage from inflation to greater stability was no accident. Businessmen, workers and farmers demonstrated much greater judgment and restraint than in earlier similar periods. Government measures in such fields as credit and banking, social insurance and agricultural price supports proved their worth in cushioning the downsizing and lending strong support to the recovery movement."

Production Boost Goal. This may all be true. But it will also be recalled that in 1948 and early in 1949 President Truman asked for many stand-by rationing, wage, price and credit controls which Congress refused.

In other words, the business recovery and the decrease in unemployment in the fall of '49 were made without benefit of these government controls. Government economists may argue that the degree of recession would have been less if Congress had granted the President these additional powers. But that is debatable.

But it is to cut unemployment to 2,000,000, to secure full employment for 64,000,000 workers and to get the most out of U. S. production that the President's avowed five-year program. It is to achieve an annual gross national product of $300,000,000,000 in goods and services by 1954. The present level is $255,000,000.

Boyle Tells Way To Achieve Security In Modern America

By HALL BOYLE
NEW YORK.—(P)—Look backward 50 years—look forward 50 years—and which period would you rather live in?

The right answer to that lies in what kind of a world is being made right now, from day to day and year to year. But as the century rolls into its fiftieth year many elderly people are doubtful that life today holds as much fun or security as it did between 1900 and 1910. My mother is one of these.

"I think young people today have a much harder time of it than we did when I was a girl," she told me. This surprised me, as it is more customary for her contemporaries to complain that this is a lazy, pleasure-seeking generation. I asked her why she thought as she did. And her answer surprised me even more.

"Well, we didn't have all the labor-saving things around the home that young wives do now," she said. "But I think we had more real security. People in those days didn't seem to have so much trouble finding a place to live, and I don't think they had to worry so much about what would happen next."

"I really feel sorry for the young people today, and I wouldn't want to trade places with them at all." Other people her age tell me that they are sure they got a bigger kick out of life than young folks do now, because they had more zest for living. They say they have found the subway no real improvement over the horse car. And they are even more certain that picnics and hayrides held more social enjoyment than an evening at the movies.

Entertainment Differs. "We used to entertain ourselves," they say, "we didn't look to others to entertain us so much."

Some of this fun and feeling of security is probably just the glamor that memory usually throws over the past. But there is also undoubtedly a hard kernel of truth in these reminiscences.

In the world of 1900 to 1914 America was a young self-confident giant just realizing his power, certain he could stand alone and whip all comers because he had always done so. But in the world of 1950 America is a middle-aged giant, coalition-backed move to give the rules committee virtual life-and-death control over major legislation. The committee is dominated by Republican and southern members.

The debate that preceded the showdown left no doubt that the President's program was a major issue. Leaders of both sides said as much.
