Radioactivity Affects On Soil, Streams Concern

WASHINGTON, (AP)—Effects of radioactivity on streams, soil and air are causing "concern" in some states. An official of the public health service so told a House appropriations subcommittee.

But, he told the lawmakers, problems relating to health already are being created in several states. "For example, at the production centers of the Atomic Energy commission, because of security reasons, the Atomic Energy commission itself has the responsibility of handling the whole problem."
