Science Building At U. Of O. Will Cost $1,500,000

PORTLAND, Jan. 31.—(P)—The building committee of the State Board of Higher Education Monday approved construction of a $1,500,000 science building at the University of Oregon.

The committee also said the structure, originally planned to cost $300,000 more, would be adapted to a new site on the Oregon campus. It was to have gone up on the west side of the campus. It now is scheduled for the northeast campus corner.

The $300,000 was lopped off in an economy move that will eliminate a brick exterior, cut out a few large classrooms and combine some laboratories.

The committee approved final plans for this structure, a $250,000 library at Oregon College of Education and a $200,000 library-museum at Eastern Oregon College of Education.

It also decided on a tentative location for the "upside-down hospital" at the medical school. That is a six-story structure to be constructed on the side of a deep ravine, resulting in an entrance on the top floor. It will be located south of the present medical school in Portland. The board has about $2,000,000 available for the hospital. Plans have not yet been drawn.

The committee authorized the University of Oregon to consult engineers on building a permanent athletic stadium on the campus. No plans have been drawn.

Weyerhaeusers Explain Springfield Expansion

TACOMA, Jan. 31.—(P)—Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. officials here today explained that the firm's expansion program in its Springfield, Ore., plant was merely a continuation of the plans for balancing the capacity of the pulp mill and container board plant against the waste output of the sawmill at Springfield.

A report published in a Portland newspaper had indicated the company was planning a 30 percent increase in the firm's pulp mill and container board plant, at a cost of between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000.

The expansion work at Springfield, the officials explained, would be similar to recent expansions at Longview and Everett.

'Prince Charlie Duck'
Makes Mouths Water

LONDON, (P)—A fancy dish named for Prince Charles was shown to the rationed British public Saturday amid much mouth watering.

"Rouennaise" cold Prince Charles—was a kind of cold braised duck with trimmings—was a feature of a hotel restaurant and catering show here.

Two London hotel chefs—G. Vaccari and P. Ruette of the Waldorf—had cooked it up with a branded stuffing and glorified it with orange slices and port wine sauce.

Drooling spectators called it a dish fit for a prince. But Charlie isn't likely to try it out for a

KRRR DIAL-LOG

Should you be thinking that television in actual operation is a practice of only the last few years or so—be informed that Don Lee Television Channel Two's 18th anniversary was a recent event! Over 18 years ago (Dec. 23, 1931) the Don Lee organization demonstrated its interest and belief in television by establishing and continuously operating on an announced program schedule what has earned the distinction of being the nation's first television broadcasting station, as such stations are known today. However, television is not "old hat" to Don-Lee Television Channel Two. Television is not merely a matter of looking at the record; to Don Lee, television remains a challenging future—with new advances, constant improvement, renewed effort and increased investment.

The list of Don Lee's technical and program contributions and "firsts" is historically significant and impressive—and has continued since the inauguration of other stations. Don Lee has created the country's first combined television and radio studios, in its Hollywood home, built expressly for simultaneous operations in both mediums. Don Lee also brought to television the first out-and-out motion picture executives, vice-presidents in charge of Charles L. Glett, and as executive producer (introducing the title to TV) Cecil Barker to inject needed motion picture thinking into television. Similarly, Don Lee is alone in having its own—and so titled—Director of Television Research in charge of color, Harry R. Lubcke. Recently Don Lee also participated in the development of the new "Electra-Zoom" lens for TV cameras now in exclusive use at Don Lee. And so it goes. Don Lee continues seeking the proverbial "better mousetrap."

Don Lee has been engaged in TV research and operation for a longer period than any other network and is proud that it developed and demonstrated successfully the first all-electronic television system known west of the Mississippi and possibly in the U. S. . . . and is honored for having assisted in the formation of present day approved standards.

Ban On Restrictive Covenants Won't Cripple General Values Of Property

By PETER EDSON
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—It may take some months to measure correctly the real effects of the Truman administration's new ban against racially restrictive covenants in government-insured housing mortgages.

If the politicians had allowed Federal Housing administration and Veterans' administration to issue their new regulations in a routine manner, the whole affair might have caused little concern. It would probably have been regarded as mere legal conformity with the supreme court decision of last May, holding that restrictive covenants were unenforceable.

What caused all the uproar was having Solicitor General Philip B. Perlman make the first announcement. He did this in a political speech before the New York state committee on discrimination in housing. That may have pleased the racial groups that have long fought housing segregation. But it rubbed many people the wrong way. They didn't know what it meant.

Now that the new regulations have been issued by FHA Administrator Franklin D. Richards and VA Administrator Carl Gray, it can be seen that these first fears were largely unjustified.

"Bootlegging" Feared
In the first place, the new regulations are effective only after Feb. 15, 1950. Between now and then, buyers and sellers of property, landlords and tenants also, can make any kind of a restrictive covenant they wish. FHA and VA will insure mortgages which have such covenants in deeds or leases. Similarly, existing deeds and leases containing covenants will not be affected.

What happens after Feb. 15 is something else. Some realtors feel that for a few months thereafter there will be a slowdown in government-insured mortgages. Bankers, builders, mortgagors and mortgagees will be feeling their way to see how strictly FHA and VA officials enforce their regulations in specific cases, and what penalties they may apply in forcing foreclosures for violations.

There is some fear that the new regulations will result in "bootlegged" covenants. Since covenants on government-insured mortgages can no longer be made part of the deed, there may be an effort to write racial or religious bans as secret or side agreements. Smart lawyers will no doubt try to use every device they can think of to beat the new restrictions.

Other Barriers Likely
Racial and religious covenants—banning the sale or rental of property to Negroes, Jews, Japanese, Chinese or other minority groups—are not the only types of
