Analyst Says, 'One World Is Long Way Off, Despite Ease In Cold War'

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
AP Foreign Affairs Analyst

Major General Frederick H. Osborn, who has resigned as U. S. deputy on the United Nations Atomic Energy commission, says he believes the world is still in for a period of trial and Americans will be deluding themselves if they feel an easy time is ahead.

The general has been trying for three years to find the basis for an agreement with Russia on world atomic control. Never having got close to a solution he now declares:

"I do not think the Soviet Union will come to agreement on the control of atomic energy until they (the dealers) reassess their relations with the world as a whole and decide that they want to live in a cooperative and friendly world."

This means, I take it, that atomic control isn't the primary consideration. World relations come first in importance, and atomic control depends on them. A thesis with which most observers are likely to agree. That brings us bang up against the troublesome question of what can produce "a cooperative and friendly world."

Most people know the answer because communism and democracy are utterly irreconcilable. That's the reason General Osborn wasn't able in three years to find a basis for agreement. It's the reason the United Nations haven't been able to get together, and aren't likely to do so.

So the conflict between communism and other ideologies will continue indefinitely. General Osborn puts it mildly when he says Americans will be deluding themselves if they feel an easy time is ahead. Most observers feel that the warfare is bound to extend far beyond the present generation.

There has been a slackening off of the cold war in Europe. The communist offensive across Europe has been halted, at least for the time being. However, simultaneously the conflict in the great Asiatic theatre has swollen to startling dimensions. Having overrun China with its vast population, communism is now using this as a base from which to strike in many directions.

Asia may well be the decisive battleground in this war of the isms, but obviously it will take many years to reach the decision. There is small prospect that the world will have "peace in our time." "One world" is a long way off.
