Lumber Industry Outlook Good, Editor Crow Says
PORTLAND, Feb. 13 — (AP) — Another lumber industry spokesman is optimistic about the prospects of prosperity in the logging and lumbering towns of the northwest this year. Mild weather in other regions boomed construction at a time when deep snow and cold weather crippled the industry in the northwest's fire belt. This has drained stockpiles while adding to unfilled order files. Carl C. Crow, editor of a lumber trade publication, said Douglas fir manufacturers had inventories 22 percent smaller than last year at this time. He said there was 30 percent more business on the books. Prices on some lumber sizes already have gone up 20 percent since December, he said.
