GREEN SCHOOL DEDICATED

New Douglas County Structure Boasts Radiant Heat, Indirect Lighting, Modern Lunch Kitchen

By MRS. GEORGE BACHER Open house was held recently at the Green school in Green valley, during which time the building was accepted by the school board and dedicated to the purpose of furthering education in the State of Oregon.

The building itself is a work of art and the community feels that the contractor, E. Shannon of Roseburg, is to be complimented. Inside and out a streamlined effect has been reached and kept in color and design (as well as the scheduling of classes and recreational facilities so ably handled by the principal, W. C. Stonebreaker).

Entering by means of a doorway leading into a small foyer, one is immediately impressed by the combination of warm and cool colors, skillfully blended so as to be "useful as well as ornamental." Not only are they pleasing to the eye as beauty goes, but they are kind to the eye as well, being done in soft tones of tans and grays with splashes of yellow in the kitchen. The first door to the right leads to the school's library looking fairly complete at present but which is "being catalogued and readjusted to conform with state requirements," to quote Stonebreaker.

Just off the library is the principal's office equipped with the usual "standard equipment" of which Douglas county schools can so rightfully boast these days—electric clocks, adding machines, telephones and the comparatively new buzzer systems by which means the principal and teachers may contact each other without the aid of the once necessary "messenger."

Next in order is the modern kitchen adjoining the cafeteria. Mrs. Emery Williams manages the kitchen, with the aid of volunteer help from mothers who have children in school. This system is reported to be working out very nicely with the aid of the P-TA. Later it is expected that it will be necessary to have a larger cafeteria and kitchen, because the community has "boomed" to the point where some 225 students now attend the school. The Green school district embraces Green valley, Happy Valley and Gengary.

A sharp left turn takes us through double doors into the large auditorium, so arranged that it serves as a gathering place for residents of the community when school programs are presented, and doubles as well as a temporary gymnasium during school hours. There is a piano and a portable stage and it is here that the boys and girls' physical education classes are conducted. Also, the school's schedule has been arranged to permit time for such activities as folk dancing, group singing and a variety of other activities. The first school bus leaves at 2 p. m., taking with it the first, second and third graders. The teachers of these grades then volunteer their time to assist teachers of the upper grades in these classes.

Of interest in the auditorium are the large sky-lights. Of a pale blue-green in color, against the sunshiny yellow of the walls, they look much like the sky itself. This illusion lingers even at night when the lights (a sort of modern version of chandeliers) are turned on. These lights boast 300 watt bulbs and this same system is used throughout the entire school. The ceiling of the auditorium, as well as in the rest of the rooms, is of acoustical sound-proof tile. Radiant heat is another added attraction.

Double doors lead out of the auditorium into a long hall, amply supplied with drinking fountains and sanitary and adequate rest rooms. The first door to the right of this grand sweep of hall leads into the first grade room, which is taught by Mrs. Tillie Borgen of Roseburg. Sandboxes and doll houses are much in evidence here, and it is interesting that "blackboards" are no longer black! They are a creamy white and the once white chalk is replaced by pastel. Pussycats adorned the room. Secondly, the second grade room. Mrs. W. C. Stonebreaker, of Winston is in charge here. A display of leaves spoke of biology, and piggy banks (made by the students) and red cross rolls dominated the scene. Here, as in all the other class rooms, a laboratory was provided for the youngsters.

And then there is a combination first and second grade room, taking care of the overflow from both Mrs. Borgen's and Mrs. Stonebreaker's rooms. Here amid toys, puzzles, crowded bulletin boards and a sea of shining faces is found the teacher, Mrs. Leona Dickinson, who resides in Roseburg. Silhouettes of Lincoln and his relatives were tacked here and there. Advancing down the hall to Mrs. Stuart Hayes' room, we find the third grade. Ages of the students have advanced here and we find indications of work of a little more intricate nature. We've graduated from the gather - round - the - table children stage now, and the new type adjustable desks in this room are eye-catching. A miniature garden of potted plants, sun itself in one of the numerous big, sunny windows.

Next comes the fourth grade under the direction of Miss Jo Ann Bolsinger of Roseburg. On the black - boards (creamy white boards!) were thumbtacked list after list of vitamins and "energy giving" foods—as paraphrased from fourth grade physiology texts. The room was made cheerful by potted daffodils, pilgrims of spring! Mrs. Margaret Austin of Roseburg is the teacher for the fifth grade room. Maps of every description appeared here, as well as some paintings worthy of mention "Blue Boy," a perennial favorite rested on the west wall as if a "picture memory," contest had been recently in progress.

In the sixth grade room themes seemed to have stolen the day, some appearing very lengthy, all done by students. Commendable maps, also a geographic accomplishment of the students outlined the bulletin boards. Mrs. Carrie Tison of Gengary teaches this group. Harry Wilson's room (he teaches the seventh grade—also resides in Winston) was less decorative. These students have passed the "play stage" and are busy trying to give comparisons of adjectives and conjugations of verbs. The rooms reeked of higher education. Lastly, we come to S. Rockwell's eighth graders. "Moby Dick" had been done in miniature, life-like figures, mounted and set up for public inspection. Worthy of mention were the scenic views painted on the windows.
