HOLLYWOOD LIFE

Ricardo Montalban Tells Why Latins Are Famous As Lovers

By BOB THOMAS
HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 27.—(AP)—Now I know why Latins are noted as lovers. It's because of chaperones. Sounds paradoxical, doesn't it? But listen to Ricardo Montalban, latest heart throb of the bobbysoxers. He admitted Latins have the reputation of being great lovers and explained why:

"Latins develop great ability at love making because it is a necessity. It all stems back to the customs of the country. In Mexico, for instance, a man has little time to tell his loved one all the things he wants to.

"The girls are constantly chaperoned, so the boys have to take advantage of the few minutes they can find to be alone with their sweethearts. They have to accomplish in a few moments what the American male can take a whole evening to say.

"Latins rely more on words than action. They are much more effusive than the average lover. They put all their feelings into words.

"In the United States, there are no chaperones, no time limit. The fellow feels he has plenty of time to get around to telling the girl how he feels."

Montalban is happily married and the father of three. His career is following the great film tradition of Rudolph Valentino, Antonio Moreno and Ramon Novarro, great Latin lovers of the past. But it has been no meteoric rise.

Before coming to Hollywood, Montalban appeared in 13 Mexican pictures between 1941 and 1945.

"In Hollywood, I made one picture, then I was off for a whole year. I made another picture and was off for another year. But now I'm on my fourth straight picture and I go right into another one.

"However, I'm glad I wasn't rushed into stardom right away. I think it's false security. You can topple too easily. I'd much rather take it slow and prove what I can do."

Incidentally, I wouldn't advise unting the lad about his lover roles. He has one of the best builds in Hollywood and has learned to box for "Right Cross." Don't say I didn't warn you.

The Perils of Pauline were nothing compared to what Lucille Ball is going through in "Fuller Brush Girl." She gets blown around by dynamite, falls into a smokestack and has a switchboard blow up in her face. Why does a glamour girl submit herself to such treatment?

"It's a challenge," she answered. "I've never done slapstick before. Slapstick may look easy, but it's really the hardest type of film to make. 'Some of the gags take a couple of days to set up,'" reported Lucille. "If a take isn't good, we have to wait two days before we can try again.

"It's hard on the clothes. I have to have duplicates and in some cases, triplicates of all my wardrobe."

I could tell what she meant. She did a scene in which a box of powder showered on her. It had to be shot three times; the first two takes weren't messy enough.
