WASHINGTON, March 23 -/ P-Senator Byrd (D-Va) says he wants to know why a justice department lawyer, who apparently once was paid $15,000 out of the United Mine Workers welfare fund, was assigned to help prosecute the miners union for contempt.

union for contempt.

The attorney, Joseph M. Friedman, declined to comment. He helped win $2,130,000 contempt of court fines against John L. Lewis and his United Mine Workers union in 1946 and 1948, and was a member of the government legal case against the UMW.

case against the UMW.

"On the face of it," Byrd told a reporter, "it loss like a very improper procedure that a department attorney, who was in effect paid $15.000 in legal fees out of the Lewis-controlled welfare fund, was later assigned by the government to prosecute Lewis' union for contempt."

Collison had resigned as a trustee and Friedman's bill was presented to the new trustees, headed by Lewis. They at first wanted a detailed explanation of what legal services Friedman had performed for Collision, as well as an opinion from the Attorney General that such payment to Friedman would be legal.

Wrote to Lewis

The senate committee records show that Collison wrote Lewis in March 1949, asking reimbursement of $15.000 for legal services performed by Rriedman.

The committee records then quote from welfare fund trustee meeting minutes of April 7, 1949, authorizing the reimbursement of the money to Collison.

Friedman helped H. Graham Morison, assistant attorney general, handle the government's prosecution of the UMW for contempt in the recent coal crisis. The union was acquitted of contempt of a back-to-work injunction order by Federal Judge Richmond B. Keech.

for the Democratic nomination for governor.

Wallace, in a letter to Flegel, said that since all are agreed on the party platform, "the debates would be more or less regarding our personal viewpoints on public matters and to quite an extent personal. and would run a very possible risk of offending each other to such an extent that it would be difficult to carry on an amicable campaign in the fall."

Besides, said Wallace, "I am saving all my fire to use on Mr. McKay (Gov. McKay, the Republican incumbent) after the primairies."
