New Chemical Kills Most Blackberries

Four to six pounds of 2,4,5-T acid per acre applied after the plants are fully leafed out but will give good control on both large and small blackberry plants, write authors Rex Warren and Virgil Freed in revised OSC extension bulletin No. 570, entitled, "Evergreen, Himalaya, and Wild Blackberry" which is now ready for release.

This is a new chemical, and not to be confused with 2,4-D.

The best time to spray using the new chemical, is when the blackberry leaves and especially the lower ones have expanded and reached mature size. The publication details the application amounts and spray pressures required.

It is difficult, if not impossible, the authors write, to obtain a 100 percent kill with the first application. After spring application, the new growth is fall treated or sprayed again the following spring.

Control measures using chlorates and ammonium sulfamate are also included.

Warren is an extension farm crops specialist. Freed is agronomist in charge of the weed control work for the OSC experiment station. Copies may be obtained from county extension offices or by writing direct to the college.
