Decision On Citizenship Of Bridges Delayed

SAN FRANCISCO, April 12. — (P) — A move to strip Harry Bridges of American citizenship was delayed Tuesday until sometime next month.

Bridges, 48, president of the big CIO longshore union, was convicted of perjury in obtaining citizenship. The Australian-born union leader was sentenced Monday to five years in prison.

The government Tuesday asked Federal Judge George B. Harris for an immediate order revoking Bridges' citizenship on the ground that it was obtained through fraud.

The judge heard both government attorneys and the defense, briefly, then announced he wanted more time to consider the matter.

He said he would give the government two weeks to file briefs, then the defense will have 10 days to answer. The matter would then be submitted to Judge Harris, who could rule at his pleasure.

Judge Harris said that to be too hasty in the matter might cause Bridges "to be caught between the grinding forces of the law."

He questioned whether he had the right to sign the citizenship revocation order now, and then sign an order staying it until the case has been appealed, clear up to the U. S. supreme court.

Attorneys could find no precedent for such a revocation order in this jurisdiction.

UNANIMITY BREAKS TIE

The vote was 2-0.

There was a tie vote in the two-man paint shop in a previous election. The other election was to determine whether the AFL Painters union should be bargaining agent for the two. The union won.
