Promotions Represented In Reorganization Plan Announced By Lockwood

Numerous personnel promotions and transfers in the state game department were announced last night by Charles A. Lockwood, state game director, as a part of a program of reorganization, which provides five supervisory districts. Promotions were announced for two local employees, James Vaughn, superintendent of the trout hatchery at Rock creek for the past 15 years, and Ross Newcomb, resident biologist in charge of the Umpqua river study since 1944.

Vaughn was elevated to the position of district supervisor and will be in charge of all game department activities for the southwestern area—Douglas, Coos, Jackson and Josephine counties.

District Offices Sited
Roseburg was selected as the site for district headquarters, Lockwood said, because of its central location with relation to roads. Office and warehouse space will be purchased or leased in or near Roseburg, where district offices will be established. Vaughn will supervise three hatcheries, a fishway and screen factory and all fish and game activities in the district. He will have a staff of biologists, hatcherymen and other workers.

The new position to which Newcomb has been elevated "will give Ross a better opportunity to use the talents he has so ably demonstrated," Lockwood told members of the Umpqua Basin Conservation Council who heard his surprise reorganization announcement at their regular meeting last night. "Ross has shown exceptional ability as a biologist in the field of research," said Lockwood. "In his new job he will coordinate all our fishery research and will work closely with the school of fish and game management at Oregon State college."

Newcomb did graduate work at Oregon state after leaving University of Maine and coming to Oregon in 1938.

Game research previously has been conducted as it is now proposed to do with fish, Lockwood said. It was pointed out, however, that formerly there has been little coordination between the various deficits some cities encounter with their airports. He asked that the voters evaluate the need of the city and then to place the airport in its proper place.

Airport Bond Issue Is Debate Topic Of Lions

Allen, next for the affirmative, asked "Would you as business men be willing to spend one cent per day of your assessed property valuation to put Roseburg on the map?" He asserted "We need the airport and we need immediate action." He spoke of the saving in transportation time airline service would afford local people, especially industrial executives to whom transportation time is a factor in stabilizing local industry. He pointed out that the cost of the airport to the city would be about 1.75 mills over a 20-year period, but that increased assessed valuations with added industry would reduce the millage rate. He asserted the attraction of added industries would more than pay the cost of the bond issue.

Other Needs First
Harth, final negative speaker, emphasized the assertion that an airport was not a prime need; that other pressing needs, such as the city hall, built in 1891 and condemned in 1902, the library, which houses $43,000 worth of books, some of them rare, storm sewers, and schools should come first. He pointed out that the $200,000 bond issue would draw $55,000 interest, that the present airport cost $130,000 and has netted the city only $10 in rental revenue. He asserted the first interest should be the schools.

Following the debate, the meeting was thrown open to questions from the floor, and considerable arguments pro and con were interjected into the discussion.

fishery research projects now in progress.

Personnel Shifts Listed
Bill Brown, former game supervisor at Grants Pass, Lockwood announced, has been advanced to district supervisor of the northeast district with headquarters at La Grande. Len Mathisen, until recently located at Reedsport, aiding in the Umpqua river study, has for the central district, with headquarters at Bend. Supervisor of the southeastern district will be Bill Lightfoot, formerly serving in the big game department at Lakeview. Leslie Zumwalt, now at Coos Bay, will be supervisor of the northwest or Willamette valley district. District supervisors were selected after examinations were given 20 field employees, Lockwood reported.

Bill Pitney, now fisheries biologist at Florence, will be transferred to Roseburg to take over his duties now held by Newcomb. Henry Reed, superintendent of the Fall River hatchery, south of Bend, will be transferred to the Rock Creek hatchery. C. C. Green, formerly of Klamath Falls, now serving as assistant at Fall River is promoted to superintendent of that plant.

Lockwood announced that the fishway and screen service, operating from the factory at Central Point, will be transferred from the fishery department to engineering.

Good Housekeepers Prefer... R.O.W. WINDOWS

Removable Open Easily Weatherstripped

Choose the windows that make good housekeeping EASIER:

EASIER because you can take them out and wash both sides indoors.

EASIER because dust and cold is kept out, heat kept in by weatherstripping.

EASIER because cushion springs replace those tired old cords, weights, and pulleys.

(Good housekeepers are invited to see a demonstration of R.O.W.—The really modern wood window. There is a model on our showroom floor.)
