Actor McCrea Ignores Stocks, Bonds Readings

By BOB THOMAS
HOLLYWOOD — (AP) — The whole thing started when an actor tossed Joel McCrea a copy of a financial daily.
I expected to see McCrea gobble up the news about stocks and bonds, since he is considered one of the most "loaded" (with moola) stars in town. But he confessed he never reads the sheet.
"I never sell," he remarked, "so why should I read a financial paper?" Then he drew on two decades of experience in Hollywood and made this observation:
"I think the trouble with most movie actors is that they think about everything but acting. They are either doping the horses or worrying about what their stocks are doing or mulling some deal to buy an apartment house. They devote their time to everything except what brings in the money to invest—motion pictures."
"The movies are a warm, satisfying business. But it's an exacting business, too. And you can't give a good performance when you worry about that call to your business agent."
McCrea, a rare star who seems properly adjusted to life, said his thoughts seldom stray far from a picture when he is making it.
McCrea's own financial interests are large, but apparently simple.
"I have my ranch, but its needs are meager," he said. "I have a man there who can handle everything himself. I could go away for six months and I wouldn't be missed."
His other investments include stocks. "I buy reliable stocks and hold onto them. They may go down

Expenses Of Truman's 'Shadow' Paid By Democrat

WASHINGTON, May 19—(AP) — Senator Brewster (R-Maine) says expenses of the Republican "Shadow" who trailed President Truman on his cross-country tour were paid by a former Democratic administration official.
Brewster — who is Senate GOP campaign chairman — told the Senate that Victor Johnston's "shadow" trip was financed by John W. Hanes of New York and North Carolina, a former undersecretary of the Treasury.
Brewster referred to Hanes as a "very distinguished Democrat."
Johnston became a much publicized figure as he turned up at whistle stops and other places on the President's tour, observing the reaction of the crowds.
"I suspected a little politics would creep into it (the President's) tour," Brewster said. "That's why we sent him (Johnston) along."
Democratic Senate leader Lucas of Illinois referred to Johnston as a "Boy Scout" who found himself "almost in agreement with the President as he went along."
Lucas read a story from the Chicago Daily News quoting Johnston as saying of the President: "Nobody hates him."
Brewster said Hanes had "generously offered to take care of the finances of the trip."
Hanes was undersecretary of the Treasury under Henry Morgenthau Jr., from November, 1928, until December, 1939.

HE WANTS TO WALK—Three year old Dickie Dorwart whose legs have been broken 16 times since he was seven months old, lies happily in his crib, in Los Angeles, hoping some day he'll learn to walk. His mother, Mrs. Maurice Dorwart, shown with him, hopes to take him to New York where a doctor may be able to stop the disease that causes Dickie's bones to break at slight pressure. He has spent most of his life with his legs in traction splints like this. (AP Wirephoto).

Blast Injures Three In Alaska

ANCHORAGE, Alaska—(AP) — Three men were hospitalized Wednesday—two of them northwest residents—because an Alaska railroad speeder made an untimely stop alongside a huge rock which workmen were trying to break with a dynamite blast.
Most seriously injured was Earl Sargent of Renton, Wash. A piece of rock was reported hurled through his face. He was to be flown to the states for treatment.
Also injured were Edward Lass, 36, of Anchorage, and Robert Howland, 32, who has a wife and four children living at Ocean Lake, Ore. Howland was expected to be released today.
Four other riders of the speedsters were treated and released.
The mishap occurred Monday night near Rainbow, about 20 miles south of here on the Alaska railroad.
Gus Rathert, Morrison-Knudson company project engineer, said the workmen had been unable to budge the rock with a bulldozer and had planted seven sticks of dynamite beneath it in an effort to dislodge it.
"Just as the trigger was pulled the speeder came around a curve and stopped opposite the face of the rock," Rathert said.
"There wasn't a chance to warn them. The charge threw small rocks everywhere and caught them as they were about to unload their tools."
It was the second such accident near Rainbow in recent weeks. Three men were killed outright and another died later in an explosion on a portion of the giant Turnagain Arm railway-highway project recently. They were employed by the Max J. Kuney Construction company.
Two M-K workers were killed March 26 and 14 others injured when a speeder collided with an Alaska railroad train near Rainbow.

RAINS RUIN COFFEE

BOGOTA, Colombia, — (AP) — Prolonged rains have slashed Colombia's coffee crop by nearly 50 percent and imperilled the nation's economy, a government spokesman said.
Colombia's income hinges largely on coffee exports which are the main source of the country's dollar exchange. Officials fear that, if the rains continue, the country may face a financial crisis.

Challenge Opens Forest Fire Prevention Campaign

PORTLAND — (AP) — Oregon's annual forest fire prevention campaign has opened with a challenge to Washington state to match its neighbor's 1950 record.
Gov. Douglas McKay waged an Oregon turkey against whatever Gov. Arthur B. Langlie of Washington might offer, that the "Keep Oregon Green" campaign will better that of Washington. The bet was promptly accepted by Howard Brier, director of the "Keep Washington Green" organization.
About 300 foresters and county forest fire prevention committee chairmen heard the governor praise the work since the K-O-G program started in 1940. He said the annual campaigns had saved $2,500,000 of timber each year. The cost of the drive, he said, was $20,000 annually.
Until the 1949 record outbreak of man-made fires, the governor said, the average number had been reduced annually. The 1930-40 average was 1,300 man-made fires. In 1947 the number was down to 422 and in 1948 to 352. Last year, however, there were 1370 forest fires in the state.
Poster contest winners — Marcia Petrequin, Milwaukie, and Claudia Kropf, Molalla — received $25 checks from the governor.
