Game Commission To Use Strike Decision Camp Adair Site Lands

The Oregon State Game commission has received title to 1.975 acres on the Camp Adair tract north of Corvallis from the U. S. General Services administration. The land is to be used for wild-life restoration work, the commission has announced.

The land acquired is located on the former army camp building area which is strewn with concrete foundations, streets, and car pool sites. Because of these obstructions, the land was rated low in agricultural value, but deemed excellent for game production.

agricultural value, but deemed excellent for game production.

Equipment and 20,000 pheasant chicks were recently transferred to the Adair tract from the Eugene game farm which is to be disposed of. The pheasant chicks will be reared in a semi-wild state by using the open field pheasant rearing system. The system allows the pheasant chicks to run free in the fields during the day. At night, the young pheasants return to a brood hen in a coop.

When seven weeks old, the pheasants will be trapped and released in western Oregon pheasant coverts. Roy Dickinson, superintendent of the Eugene game farm, heads the Adair pheasant project.
