Case Against Big Corporations

The Justice department's anti-trust division is said to be gunning now of the United States Steel corporation. It is predicted the government will seek the company's break-up into smaller units.

If this action comes off as forecast, it won't be based on claims of monopoly. U. S. Steel accounts for slightly less than one-third of the total U. S. steel output. Monopoly charges would have made much sense years ago when the company did 60 percent of the industry's

Today the government has a new idea: that the old, crude ways of monopolizing trade have been supplanted by smoother, more subtle devices. Anti-trust officials contend that nowadays a leading company or a Big Three can restrain competition just as surely as any monopoly.

The same reasoning has been ages on it.

Experienced Personnel, Adequate Equipment Will Be Ready For Duty In Present Oregon Fire Season

SALEM, Oregon-(Special)-Over 1,000 men will make up the protection personnel of the state forestry department and its cooperating protective associations during the present forest fire season, according to George Spaur, state forester. According to the forester, these ex-perienced men will form the core of the organization set-up to protect approximately 13 million acres of timberlands coming under the state supervision. The men will be established in their field positions by the first of July and include office personnel, permanent employes, emergency fire camp crews, wardens, smokechasers, lookouts, headquarters crews and maintenance crews.

Preparatory step in getting this large organization into shape for the season's work was made by a series of training schools which was initiated by an instructor's school held in the Salem office. At that time the various men were given instruction in the methods of conducting the schools in the filed, how to instruct and what to instruct. Don Maus, forest training officer, handled the instruction and establishment of the fire schools for the forestry department.

Administration of the schools was handled by the various forest protective districts throughout the state. strain competition just as surely as any monopoly.

The same reasoning has been applied to the pending A. and P. case. The A. and P. does less than its field. Yet the government wants to split it into seven parts on the ground it is limiting trade.

Having already won a criminal suit against A. and P., the Justice department is confident it will win the split-up suit. And presumably its hopes will be high if it opens fire on U. S. Steel.

But should it fail in these attacks, there's some indication it may urge that the anti-trust laws be made stronger.

A call for new legislation undoubtedly would be followed by intense congressional scrutiny of the whole issue. Yet why should an inquiry wait until such a moment? There's need for it now.

The Justice department is admittedly practicing a new theory; we have only its own word that this notion fits the language and aims of existing laws. Its attacks on bigness as actually or potentially "bad" for competition may real
