Lumber Firm Settles Suit With Stockholders

PORTLAND June 30—(AP)—The Portland Art association today reported settlement of a $400,000 suit against Eastern & Western Lumber company stockholders. The out-of-court settlement was for a reported $254,000.

The association contended in its suit that it had been induced to sell company stock far below its true worth.

Phony Mating Calls Fail To Attract Mosquitoes

NEWARK, N. J., June 30—(AP)—The Essex county mosquito extermination commission tried to lure mosquitoes to a trap with phony mating calls—but the mosquitoes didn't bite.

The commission Wednesday abandoned a proposed scheme to outfit electric traps with loud-speakers that would buzz sweet nothings in mosquito language.

Preliminary tests didn't work, except for a relatively few mosquitoes. It turned out that there are 15 different species of mosquitoes here, and each answered only to its own special call.

Gasoline Price War Prevention Attempted

PORTLAND June 30—(AP)—An attempt to head off a gasoline price war in Portland drew some 600 service station operators to a meeting here last night.

A number of stations have been cutting prices recently, and speakers warned a price-war would be sure to follow, perhaps forcing many out of business.

Dealers were asked to sign pledges against price-cutting. It was not announced how many signed.

Jack Layley, president of the Portland Automotive Trade association, which sponsored the meeting, proposed that prices be stabilized at 27.7 cents a gallon for regular gas and 30 or 30.2 cents for Ethyl.
