Storm Sewer Bond Issue Will Be Put On Ballot

last meeting at a fee of eight percent of the cost less land purchases and building costs. Councilman Frank Ashley questioned that the council could legally employ an engineer without submitting the issue to bids. He called attention to the city charter requiring submission to bids any work or material purchases in excess of $250. The charter, however, carries the phrase, "unless the council deems bids impractical."

Ashley stated he did not object to the engineer selected, but he questioned paying an eight percent fee, without opening the issue to bids.

Engineering Contract Okd — After discussion, the council passed a motion declaring it was "impractical" to call for bids and ratifying the contract with Irving on the eight percent fee basis, subject to federal government approval. It was pointed out the government would not authorize expenditures deemed excessive. It was also brought out that Irving has already done considerable survey and engineering work on the project, that this work would be lost to the city, if another man were hired, and that he is the only available engineer residing within the city limits.

The council voted to proceed with the South Kane street, sidewalk and sewer improvements on a "force account" basis. The only bid submitted at the last council meeting, which was in excess of $21,000, was rejected as too high. The engineer's estimates totaled $18,280, but the council believes the project can be done only by force account, under the city manager's direction for about $16,454. The council passed a motion to issue warrants to pay for the cost of So. Kane St. improvements and for West Roseburg sewers. The warrants will be subject to repayment by the property owners, but will make possible paying for the construction and labor on the work on a monthly basis.
