Congress Yields To Baruch's Talk

By JAMES MARLOW

WASHINGTON—(P)—Old Bernard Baruch lit a firecracker under congress and the president. The result: congress probably will freeze prices and wages.

If you looked at the lean face of the 80-year-old Baruch, who has been an economic adviser to presidents, you'd guess he was shrewd enough with money to be rich, which he is.

He came down to Washington last week and spoke his piece to congress. In effect, what he said was "don't play around, don't take chances, don't use half-way measures."

After we got into the Korean fighting, Pres. Truman asked congress to do some things to help pay for re-arming and stop inflation.

He asked for higher taxes, government controls on buying-things-on-time, and enough government control over industry to say what firms could use what materials, and who could have them first.

Far Short
This fell far short of asking for all-out controls, which would have to include controls over prices and wages. The president said he does not think they're needed now. He said he'd ask for them, if and when.

Even so, what the president asked for was too much for Sen. Taft, Ohio Republican, and those who follow his line of thinking. Taft said the president wanted too much power in the controls he mentioned.

This sort of divided thinking around him until last week when Baruch arrived on the scene. And what he told congress went like this:

"This is no time for business as usual or the middle of the road. If we're getting ready for war—if it comes—let's go all the way. If we fiddle around and let prices and wages get out of hand, we'll ruin the economy."

Almost at once the feeling began to change. More and more congressmen began to take up the Baruch line. And finally Tuesday Pres. Truman told congress in effect:

"Okay, if you want to give me power to freeze prices and wages, go ahead. But don't do it in such a way that I'll have to start freezing them at once. Do it this way: 'Pass a law saying I can put in price and wage controls immediately, when I think they're needed.' That's what congress probably will do now: give the president stand-by power to freeze prices and wages.

Pleasing
This appears to be politically pleasing to congress, for it makes the actual invoking of such controls a responsibility of the president—not congress.

At the same time, all this seems to have worked out pretty well for Mr. Truman. For one thing, as he pointed out, wage and price controls are pretty controversial.

If he had asked for them, at the same time he asked for the others, the whole business might have been delayed in congress because of the arguments bound to arise over wages and prices. And, as he noted, the controls he did ask for were wanted right away.

Now, with Baruch making the pitch to congress and congressmen getting steamed up over Baruch's advice, steamed up to the point of giving Mr. Truman more than he asked for, Mr. Truman is sitting pretty.

Further, the way all this has come about must be pleasant to Mr. Truman's Democrats in congress who face the voters in this fall's congressional elections.

If the president had asked for wage and price controls right away—and got them—the government might make a terrible mess trying to put them into effect without time for setting up machinery to handle them.

Relief
And if there was a mess, the voters might not feel friendly to Mr. Truman's Democrats. Now—if congress votes stand-by wage and price controls—Mr. Truman can do this:

Set up some kind of agency, or skeleton agency, which could get ready to slap on wage and price controls if that becomes necessary, thus giving the government time to prepare against mistakes.

Further, since business doesn't like price controls and labor does not like wage controls, neither side can be mad at Mr. Truman if congress all on its own—nudged by Baruch—insists on giving Mr. Truman what he didn't ask for.

Yet Baruch himself had only summed up what had been a growing and widely expressed feeling in the country as a whole. It remained for Baruch to tell it to congress face to face.

Six Rivers National Forest Fire Battled
EUREKA, Calif., (P)—More than 500 men were battling wild flames in the Six Rivers national forest today.

William Fischer, supervisor of the forest, said the chances of soon subduing the fire which already blackened 600 acres of timber, are slim.

The fire area is just south of the Oregon border and within 25 miles of Crescent City, Calif. The fire started in Siskiyou national forest and was blown into the Six Rivers area by high winds.

Fischer said the fire is the fourth major blaze in the Six Rivers forest this year. All are believed to have started by lumbering operations, he added.

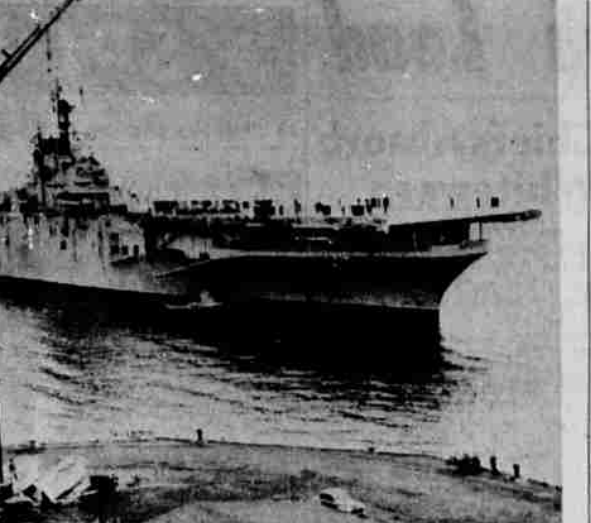

SALEM—(P)—A pair of surgical forces was removed from a Salem woman's abdomen Thursday after being embedded there for five years.

The doctor who performed the operation said that the forces were left in the woman when she was operated upon in California five years ago.

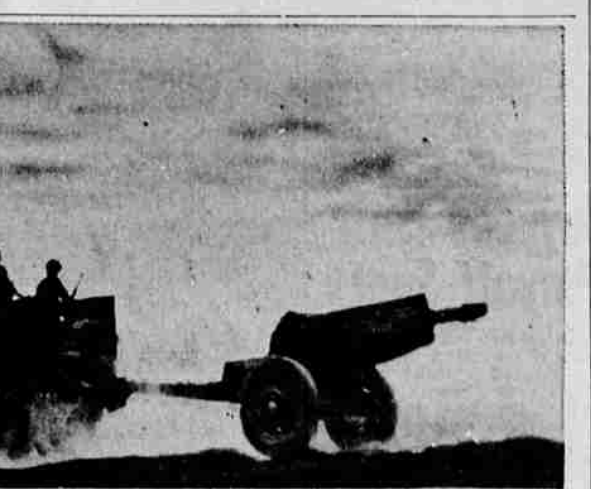

The doctor, who declined to allow his name to be used, said the woman was very large, and that the forces were embedded in fatty tissue.

The operation was performed at Salem Memorial hospital.

SETS PACIFIC CROSSING RECORD—Aircraft carrier U. S. S. Boxer slides into a berth at the San Francisco Naval Shipyard, back from a bumpy voyage to Japan where she delivered F-51 Mustang fighters and a Navy composite air group to reinforce the Far East command. She made the run to Japan in eight days and seven hours and returned to the U. S. S. in seven days 18 hours and 36 minutes, a new world record for surface vessels cross the Pacific Ocean.

Soviet Ruse Seen For Air Blockade Of All Berlin

BERLIN—(P)—The communist East German government asked Russia today to protect the Soviet zone from alleged dropping of incendiary bombs by U. S. PLANES. This raised the possibility of a Soviet attempt to blockade American planes from Berlin.

A step which might touch off the East-West powderkeg here.

The Communist government forwarded to Moscow a report by Minister of Interior Stenboff that incendiaries were loosed on East German aircraft on two occasions last month. (The U. S. air force headquarters in Weisbaden has denied American planes were involved).

The East government's appeal to Moscow for "protection" came on the heels of a hint by the Soviet control commission's official newspaper that a Soviet air blockade of Berlin may be in the offing.

Taegliche Rundschau published an interview with a Communist worker who demanded that the Soviet union bar American planes from flying over East Germany to prevent "our entire crop from going up in flames."

This latest accusation followed a charge three months ago by Communist officials that American flyers had dropped Colorado beetles on East German potato fields.

The Communists gave the beetle charges the full propaganda treatment. It was aired in the Communist German press and re-echoed in the press of the Soviet satellite. It was ridiculed by American authorities.

All Allied officials view seriously the Moscow undertaker to use the East German complaint for anything more than propaganda.

Ex-WAC Nominated For Sheriff In Idaho
IDAHO CITY, Ida., (AP)—A former WAC sergeant won the Boise county Republican nomination for sheriff. If elected next fall she will become Idaho's first woman sheriff.

Mrs. Harrison (Babe) Hansen, 59, ran up 145 votes in eight of Boise county's 10 precincts to win over Charles Newell of Horseshoe Bend and John W. Rynearson of Idaho City.

She has served as a guide for big game parties in Idaho's primitive area for years. She is recognized as one of the state's best marksmen and has killed 75 cougars.

Mrs. Hansen operates a ranch on the middle fork of the Salmon river.

Senate Probers Seek Horse Bookmaker
WASHINGTON—(P)—The senate crime investigating committee is on the trail of a Chicago gambler moved in on the lush Florida gambling field.

The missing witness is Harry Russell, identified by the committee as a Chicago gambling operator who became a member of the highly profitable S. and G. horse book syndicate in Miami Beach.

Russell's name figured prominently in testimony at the committee's hearing when other members of the syndicate gave their version of how the Chicagoan came in for a one-sixth interest for $20,000.
