In 1949 some 488 community project leaders met with clothing specialists to learn steps in dress and tailoring construction. This year already 457 leaders have been trained in 71 workshops. The fall program will add many more in which 21 counties will be participating.

Last year those trained community project leaders each taught at least one class of six women. Over the state these women made 2110 dresses, suits or coats at an estimated saving of $28,712.47.

Six counties will carry tailoring workshops this fall; seven, better dresses; eight, cotton dresses. Clothing workshops are progressive. Benton, Yamhill and Hood River counties have completed a four year series which included cotton dress, better dress, wool dress and tailoring. Miss Lane estimates that 1950 will be the heaviest clothing year yet.

Rugs, Hooked And Braided, Made From Shirts, Suits

In grandmother's time ragged wool suits and shirts wound up in a crazy quilt. Today her granddaughter is converting such garments into hooked and braided rugs, reports Mrs. Myrtle M. Carter, O. S. C. extension specialist in home furnishings.

Ten counties are carrying this rug making project in their 1950 51 programs. Six county groups learned principles of rug making last year. Several counties have as many as 200 enrolled for this work. One may expect to see many completed rugs shown at the annual homemakers' festivals in the spring of 1951, predicts Mrs. Carter.

High Flavor, Low Cost Feature Puree Dessert

A frozen fruit puree dessert that retains the natural flavor of the fresh fruit, and which shows promise for commercial production because of its ease and economy of manufacture, has been developed in the food technology department of the Oregon State college experiment station.

The dessert was developed in studies made by Glen Lundeen, research fellow in food technology according to E. H. Wiegand, department head.

A boysenberry puree blended with apple or peach puree was found to make a highly acceptable frozen dessert in packing and taste test trials. Peaches, cantaloupes and strawberries also were used with good results.

Lundeen found that pureed fruit yields an excellent product that is rich in natural fruit flavor and is sweetened. Used in a frozen dessert, the product combines excellent flavor with an appealing appearance, good consistency, texture and melt down characteristics similar to ice cream. The fruit content of the frozen dessert is 60 percent or more, as compared with 20 percent by weight of fruit juice found in ice cream, fruit ices and sherbets.

The simplicity and low cost of manufacture are two factors which enhance the commercial possibilities of this dessert. In preliminary studies, the cost of the ingredients—fruit puree, sugar and stabilizer—amounted to eight cents per pint. The dessert can be mixed in an ice cream freezer and served directly from it, or may be packaged in pint cartons for storage. Experimental packs were stored for four months at 0 degrees F. with little deterioration of color or flavor.

Workshops Spread In State Noted

A demand for clothing workshops this year in Oregon bears out national statistics showing a sharp increase in sales of patterns, thread and yardage points out Miss Lucy Lane, O. S. C. clothing specialist.

Oregon rural women believe that by making their family clothing they are beating the high cost of ready made garments, keeping in the height of fashion, and receiving a deep sense of creative satisfaction.

these are the hands that REALLY tell the time!

See those sensitive fingers? — That is the point where the time is really figured. At the watch factory, after the assemblers put the movement of your watch together, it goes to the watchmaker for final check and adjustment. From this time on — your watch movement is in the watchmaker's hands. What kind of timekeeping you get depends upon his skill.

Hardly a day goes by that someone doesn't say to us... "I'll never have another X brand watch," or "I've never gotten good timekeeping from my Y brand watch." In a two-week period we will hear criticism of this sort concerning every well-known watch on the market.

Once in a great while a faulty watch will somehow pass final inspection at the factory and reach the consumer — but this is an extremely rare occurrence.

Of the well-known watches there are none that will not keep good time if properly serviced.

A watch, like an automobile or any other machine, will run properly only if properly serviced. Proper installation of new parts, where there is wear or damage, will insure restoration to good service.

Repair service given the watch, rather than the brand, is the key to good timekeeping service.

What we want to point out is that in purchasing a watch, it is most important to select a jeweler with a reputation for watchmaking service. Whatever other guarantees you may get with your watch — it is the jeweler from whom you buy your watch who guarantees the time-keeping. His reputation for service is your best guarantee.

Your comments and inquiries about watches and timekeeping are invited.
