Seat Of Early-Day Learning At Lookingglass Adds Touch Of Interest To Community's Dated 'Gay Nineties Review'

EARLY DAYS RECALLED—This was Lookingglass school in 1889. The building was considered a "fine" structure, consisting of two stories. Nearly 100 pupils attended. The second floor was used for community dances and other entertainment. Early days at Lookingglass are being recalled by the Parent-Teachers association, which is sponsoring a "Gay 90's Review" the nights of Nov. 17-18 at the Lookingglass school.

Events of early-day Lookingglass are brought to mind in connection with the "Gay 90's Review," which the Parent-Teachers association of that community will present at a p.m. Nov. 17-18 in the school.

Conditions at Lookingglass are greatly changed. Early day pupils went to school in a log cabin on the Ollivant place. The school moved to the church, then to the Grange hall. Finally the two-story building shown in the accompanying picture, was erected. Annie Kent was the first teacher. She handled nearly 100 pupils.

In the early days school was held for two or three months, or as long as funds held out. Later a system was used in which the students attended school three months in the fall and three months in the spring.

Discipline was harsh. Almost any form of corrective measure was practiced. Students were often whipped with straps, rubber strips or rulers. Old timers recall the teachers wore out a hazel switch each day.

Between the school and the store was a "sparking bench," from which the teachers had to call the students for class.

The second floor of the school was used for dances and other forms of entertainment. During the Christmas season two trees were placed in the front corners and trimmed with popcorn strings and rose wreaths. The children fastened toys and dolls on the tree for other decorations.

The Stricklands and Buells came across the plains together in a covered wagon train, first to Oakland. The old John D. Lee donation land claim was taken over by F. M. Strickland, father of A. O. Strickland, about 1852. He could have taken up part of the Portland site for a homestead, but chose Lookingglass valley.

At the rear of the Strickland house stands an old fort, used originally as refuge in case of an Indian attack, and later as a saddle shop. Strickland homesteaded and picked up school land and donation land grants until he owned about 2000 acres at one time.

Tom Ollivant married Cora Rose, daughter of Aaron Rose, founder of Roseburg. She and her husband still reside in Lookingglass.

THIEVES STEAL SAFE

VANCOUVER, B. C. —(CP)—Safecrackers escaped early Friday with several thousand dollars, possibly as much as $5,000, from Railway Express agency in the Great Northern railway depot here.

The safe was carted away, apparently pulled through a front door and loaded on a truck.

Spokane C. Of C. Booklet Pays Off In Jap Outlay

SPOKANE — (CP) — Chamber of SPOKANE C OF C PHYL commerce officials modestly wondered what the rest of the world will think when it sees an industrial directory published by the foreign trade section of the Hyogo prefectural government at Kobe, Japan.

The book purports to list "all available data of the world's most important industrial firms."

Spokane industry is given 19 pages — 38 times as much space as New York, nine times as much as either London or Seattle, and six times that of Chicago, Philadelphia and only three inches of small type.

How come? Well, Hamilton Owen, chamber secretary, explains it this way:

Last year, Owen received a letter from Hide Fukimoto of Kobe asking for a list of the principal industries in Spokane. Owen sent him a copy of the chamber's local business handbook.

Every word was reprinted in the world directory — from AA Auto wrecking to Zebrist's radio parts shop.
