Huge Trees From Tiny Seeds Grow

One of the great mysteries of life is how one of the world's largest living things — a Douglas fir tree — can grow from one of the smallest seeds.

When workmen start their fascinating job each spring of planting millions of tiny seeds at the Forest Industries Tree Nursery at Nisqually, Washington, they work with minutely small seeds. It takes 40,000 seeds of Douglas fir to make a pound. Seeds of other popular species in the Douglas fir belt are even smaller. It takes 300,000 West Coast hemlock seeds to make a pound; 250,000 Sitka Spruce and 400,000 Western red cedar seeds to total up a pound.

Nature is at her ingenious best in propagating the conifer trees of the Pacific coast. Seeds are winged and are released from their cone homes in the late fall when ripe. The hot east winds cause the cones to open and the seeds are wafted earthward on their own wings prodded along by gentle breezes and swifter winds.

Most of all logged land, probably more than 90 percent, easily re-

TRUSTY DISAPPEARS

SALEM — Trusty James Olen Evans, 29, who had served 12 years of a life term sentence, vanished last night from the prison farm.

Evans was convicted of armed assault in Union county. He was dressed in tan trousers, green shirt and brown hat when he left the farm, police said.
