Wood molasses was found to be a good food for sheep, hogs and poultry. It comes from wood waste, and will save livestock owners a lot of money.

The station is doing much research in canning methods. It wants to make canned foods taste like fresh foods.

New oyster beds, including rebuilding the once-famous Yaquina bay beds, might result from the discovery of a method of raising oyster larvae in the laboratory.

Raising the oyster larvae this way and then planting them would remove most of the hazards of the oyster industry.

A new outlet for Oregon-grown flax might come from the station's development of weaving flax yarns into draperies, linens and upholstering materials.
