the shocking failures and the gross inequities of defense policies.

The labor meetings here aimed at enlisting the support of community groups, through the local and state leaders attending, behind the united labor policy committee's fight.

CIO President Philip Murray said the management groups which opposed giving a newly-formed wage stabilization board power to settle all kinds of disputes wanted to force workers "into a narrow, blind alley."

"On the one side: A rigid, unyielding wage formula," Murray said. On the other side, the malicious, provocative provisions of the Taft-Hartley anti-labor law.

Murray said a coalition in Congress produced "an inefficient specimen of law" in the defense production act. He added:

"It is cumbersome and ineffective. It cannot keep prices down, also in many sectors of the economy, it does not even try. It is made to order for the exploiter, the profiteer and the speculator."

Visit Of Princess To Pope Protested

LONDON — (AP) — A protestant group protested to King George VI today that a visit by Princess Elizabeth to Pope Pius XII would be "an affront to national sentiment."

Two other Protestant organizations last week voiced similar sentiments about reports that heires to Britain's throne might pay a courtesy call to the Roman Catholic pontiff when she visits Rome April 11.

O. T. Taylor, honorary secretary of the protestant alliance, said in his letter to the king "such a visit is calculated to create surprise, perplexity and profound sorrow among many millions of your majesty's loyal subjects."

"The news," he added, "would be flashed round the world as papal propaganda of the greatest value."

Taylor said his Protestant alliance has about 1,000 official members but that his letter represents the views of "countless thousands" of British protestants.

Protestant groups also protested to the king when Princess Margaret had an informal audience with the pope during her visit to Italy in 1949.
