Flier Who Landed On Rainier Faces Federal Penalty

McCHORD AIR FORCE BASE, Wash. — (AP) — Double trouble appeared in the office today for the first flier to land atop 14,000-foot Mt. Rainier and take off again.

Lt. John Hodgkin, the 42-year-old aerial daredevil from Selma, Calif., faced possible disciplinary action from two quarters—the air force and the National Park service.

Meanwhile, McChord field a u-authorities described his status as "restricted to his quarters."

Hodgkin landed his ski-equipped light plane on the grass at nearby Spanaway Saturday afternoon—and airmen were almost as surprised that he didn't crack up on that one as they were to hear that he had pushed his powerless Cub, glider-like, from the top of Rainier. He flew back after gasoline was dropped to him on a frozen mountainside lake. He had spent his second night's "outing" there. He spent the previous night on the mountain top.

Park service authorities said he was being charged with landing in a national park, which is against the law. Asst. Park Supt. H. L. Bill said he will be taken before a U. S. commissioner. The offense could entail a $500 fine, a six-month jail sentence or both.

Lt. Col. R. W. Etter, Hodgkin's commanding officer, said an investigation was ordered to see if there should be court-martial action.

Building for Peace— or EMERGENCY

LAST YEAR we reinvested more than 19 million dollars in new plants, equipment and roads. During the past 5 years such reinvestment has totaled more than 100 million dollars. The purpose is to create facilities to make fullest possible use of our timber harvest... to provide a dependable source of materials for homes and industry for peaceful purposes. And this steadily increasing ability to produce is at the nation's service in times of emergency. It is our policy to continue reinvestment of income in plant expansions, research, development of new products and engineering improvements. This should mean more jobs, and contribute to the economic stability of the Pacific Northwest.

400,000 Civilian Watchers Needed

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — (AP) — Air defense command headquarters here has called for 400,000 civilian volunteers to spot low flying aircraft over the U. S.

The ADC said they'll be needed to "expand the system of civilian aircraft observers so that it will extend across the entire northern part of the U. S. and along both coasts."

There are 100,000 volunteers now manning 8,000 observation posts and 26 filter centers along the east and west coasts and Great Lakes region. The ADC said 11,400 new observation posts and 26 filter centers will be established by July 1.

Staffed by a minimum of 25 volunteers, the observation posts will be about eight miles apart. Each volunteer is on duty two hours a day.

Filter centers correlate the reports from observers and plot the track of reported aircraft. The centers are staffed by 500 volunteers and will be in cities providing good telephone communications in their area.
