Non-Anesthesia Surgery Common Among Russians

LOS ANGELES — (AP) — Major surgery without anesthesia is a common practice in Russia, a British neurologist asserts.

Dr. MacDonald Critchley, director of the neurological institute, London, told the annual convention of the California Medical association:

"I personally have witnessed major operations which were performed in Russia without the slightest use of any form of anesthesia. The patients betrayed not the slightest evidence that they felt any pain. There was no indication that these people had been hypnotized. It's possible their part-Oriental blood had something to do with the phenomenon."

He said he witnessed a major operation on a woman in Russia who was not even given a sedative.

"The woman bore the pain stoically. The surgeon, in reply to my questions, said it was a common practice. He said: 'We Russians are better able to stand pain than other races.'"

Other interesting findings about pain as reported by Dr. Critchley, an international authority, are:

Women stand pain better than men.

The more cultured and educated a person, the more sensitive to pain he becomes.

Severe pain may be verbalized by exquisite pleasure — such as that the martyrs may have felt. A few people appear to be born pain-proof. One attorney died at 36 without ever having experienced pain. When a finger required amputation he "just smiled and bit it off. The most famous case was that of a man who made his living by driving nails into his body. He tried to crucify himself before an audience, but had to stop when a score fainted."

CHECKS DISPLAY—Jack Brookins, was one of the judges for the Roseburg Senior high school industrial arts exhibit Wednesday night. The work of the students will be on display at the high school up until 10:30 tonight. It will then be moved up town to windows along Jackson street for display Friday and Saturday.
