Oregon Slates Indian Liquor License Check

PORTLAND — (AP) — Liquor license applications from Oregon Indians will be checked through the Indian service under a plan announced by the State Liquor commission.

This will help solve the troublesome problem of sale of liquor to Indians, a commission spokesman said yesterday.

Some Indians who are not wards of the government are allowed to purchase liquor. Others are not.

Under the commission proposal, Indian applicants for liquor licenses will be required to fill out a special certificate. The certificate will be sent to the Indian service for a check on whether the applicant is a government ward.

The commission also announced that after Dec. 31, no more beer will be sold in the area around the University of Oregon campus at Eugene. The decision came after a commission study of the beer problem there, prompted by complaints that minors were buying beer.

The commission changed the Hermiton liquor store to an agency.

The commission ordered cancelled the permit of Farrell Frank Baker of Roseburg, and suspended for seven days the license of the Igloo Tavern, Riddle.

Negotiations, which have been underway for several weeks, will continue, Graven said.

There have been a number of brief walkouts in various Oregon cities in recent weeks to protest what workers termed delays in negotiations.

Pick-Ups

By PAUL JENKINS
I've come to the conclusion that if a man wasn't born tired (I'm sure in my own case I was born that way) he was born to get tired.

Recently I took a week's "vacation," during which time I caught up on some of the jobs involving carpentry and painting which the average householder feels he must do himself, on the grounds that he isn't financially able to hire a professional to do it for him.

Well, I got the jobs done all right (after a fashion) but when each day's work was finished I felt like a devil had been kicking me, what with the aching of various joints and sets of muscles I had forgotten I possessed. "Just wait until I get back on the job," I promised myself, "then I'll have a chance to rest up."

But I'll be everlastingly confounded if it works that way. Usually no great amount of physical exercise, aside from considerable leg work at times, is connected with taking pictures and the subsequent processing and printing of the film; but less me if I didn't get all bogged down with fatigue just the same.

I can even take a Sunday off and do nothing but sit in the yard and listen to the bees hum and the birds sing; but — you know the answer — by night I'm all tuckered out. It just goes to prove you can't beat the game when the cards are stacked against you; and the cards were stacked against most of us when we were born. We were born to get tired.

Soldiers Desire Reading Material

Reading material is needed by soldiers in Korea.

Mrs. James Baird, Oakland Star route, has a letter from her brother, Cpl. Charles C. Allen, asking for magazines and papers.

"All the material we get is a paper now and then and it is badly worn out by the time it goes around to all of us," Cpl. Allen writes. "We sure would like to have any kind of reading material, and I'll see that it gets well appreciated and used."

The corporal tells how baseball fields have been laid out on rice paddies to provide entertainment.

He raises the work of the Red Cross.

Mrs. Baird is asking direct mailing of reading material to her brother, Cpl. Charles C. Allen, 56094057, Co. C, 32nd Inf. Reg. APO 7, care of Postmaster, San Francisco, Calif., or to her husband, Pfc. James H. Baird, 56037023, Co. C, 84th Eng. Const. Bn., APO 301, care of Postmaster, San Francisco, Calif.

YOUR BODY

Roseburg, Ore. — (Pd. Adv.) — These Health articles are written by Dr. L. A. Kasparie, Chiropractic Physician, 1500 Garden Valley Rd. to help you to understand the body function. This article is on the liver and gall bladder function.

The body was made for health and not for sickness; it was made for pleasure and not for pain.

The liver is one of the most important organs of the body and the largest gland. It weighs an average of four pounds. It secretes a quart of fluid necessary for the vital processes of the body every day. It is the great chemical laboratory of the human body. It needs great care and attention to keep it in good working order. An animal with its liver removed cannot live more than a few hours.

The liver prevents poisons from reaching the blood stream and organs of the body. It synthesizes the fibrogen necessary for the clotting of blood. It also produces an anti-thrombin to prevent the clotting of blood within the blood vessels. It stores fats and sugars, to be released as needed.

The liver is primarily a gland which secretes bile. The bile stimulates other secretions and helps peristaltic action when necessary. It checks bacterial action. The bile pigments arise from dead blood cells and impart color to the stools. The bile salts are needed in the digestion of fats.

Liver is a Vital Organ
Normal functioning of the liver is necessary to good health. Neglect of it may lead to serious disorders. One of the most common ailments of the liver is congestion of the organ. This may be the precursor of more serious ailments, such as hepatitis or inflammation, cirrhosis, fatty degeneration, etc. In many cases of liver trouble, this organ weighs as much as 10 or more pounds.

The gall bladder has the important function of storing the bile and releasing it when necessary to carry on digestion. Functional disturbances of the liver and gall bladder contribute greatly to the common diseases of mankind.

Many cases of sufficing and distress after a meal and usually blamed on the stomach are really caused by gall bladder trouble. Women are frequent sufferers from it, because of involved cholesterol chemistry. Their menstrual function and child bearing greatly influence it.

At the menopause, this particular body chemistry undergoes a radical change.

Overweight, Gall Bladder Trouble
More overweight women suffer from liver and gall bladder trouble than any other group. Eating rich food, tight lacing, a sedentary occupation or a poor nerve supply will cause the bile to become thick and slow moving, at times hardening into gall stones. This process may be slow, insidious and nagging.

Sometimes it flares up when a stone passes through the duct leading to the small intestine. This produces a sudden attack of gall bladder colic. This excruciating experience is not one to be soon forgotten.

Headaches, moodiness, a coated tongue, constipation, sallow complexion and irritability usually indicate a sluggish liver. A physical examination of the patient is not complete until the gall bladder, liver and nerve supply to these organs has been checked. A spinal examination to detect any possible interference with the nerve supply to these vital organs is a must.

The Liver and a Clear Complexion
The skin you love to touch is practically impossible with a sluggish liver. The skin is an organ that reflects the internal cleanliness of the body. As the tongue denotes an impure blood stream, the skin will act in a similar manner. Blisters, pimples and a sallow complexion show at a glance, some liver disturbance.

The patient feels sluggish and below par and has lost pep and ambition; while in that stage, proper treatment and care will usually restore the patient's vitality. This procedure may prevent such serious diseases as cirrhosis and other degenerative ailments of this organ.

There is nothing more precious than good health. The human body will keep well with proper care. Falls, colds, strains, wrong posture, occupation and age will displace the body structures of the body and cause disease. The intelligent practitioner will correct all of these conditions. He will purify the blood stream to adequate elimination and restore the needed elements needed to heal and rebuild diseased tissues.

The intelligent application of these methods will raise the patient's vitality and restore normal health. Many cases of high blood pressure are caused by a congested liver and the hypertension will be reduced when the cause is removed. Splendid results usually follow application of Nature's laws in sick cases. A sick body that has enough vitality to be alive under wrong conditions has enough vitality to get well under right conditions.
